Introduction

ARE YOU FEELING SAD, anxious and stressed? Do you feel as though life has no meaning? This book will help you find inner peace and live a happy life. And this, because this book is filled with powerful truths about life, truths that will inspire you to see through your problems and difficulties with a higher capacity to solve them.

Robin Sacredfire has been one of the most popular authors over the past years and this trend has been rapidly increasing. Millions of people from around the world are helped through his words and insights, and love to share the knowledge with their friends, to help them, uplift them, and inspire them. For them, this author is like a renewing wave of energy in the world, an energy that, wherever it passes, doesn't leave any rock unmoved. Nobody remains the same after coming in contact with his words. But why is Robin Sacredfire so popular? His words are empowering, and for a vast array of reasons. He is an Author, Entrepreneur, Music Producer, DJ, Fashion Designer, Experienced College Lecturer, Experienced Business Consultant, former Human Resources Manager, and a former expert in learning disabilities as well, among many other things.

Robin Sacredfire has been awarded for many reasons too. He was considered by many to be one of the world experts in the Law of Attraction, in some cases, even considered one of the top 10 best in the world. His online courses on business were also considered top 20. As an author, nearly all his books ranked as bestsellers on Amazon Kindle, the iBookstore and Kobo. Even some of his companies have received world awards and recognitions. And it doesn't stop here, for he has been awarded in nearly every thing he has ever done, including as a music producer, by MTV, and as a DJ, by Mixcloud.

Robin Sacredfire has been traveling the world for the past twenty years, and visited more than seventy cities from around the globe, which allowed him to see through the depths of the human soul as not many have seen. This experience gave him the foundation to put into words more than three hundred books and over ten audiobooks in a large variety of topics and under many pen-names. So may you feel empowered and inspired by his quotes and sayings. They are the best resume of his wisdom and the fastest way to access his knowledge. Share them with your friends and acquaintances, and allow the light to shine on the world as it enlightens you.

Quotes & Sayings

1. “A BOTTLE OF ALCOHOL shortens your life by four minutes, a cigar shortens your life by six minutes and a day of work shortens your life by eight hours.”

— Robin Sacredfire

2. “A decision is a conscious act and random thoughts are subconscious manifestations.”

— Robin Sacredfire

3. “A judgement does not end with one lifetime. Nothing is forgiven or forgotten. We are all still here as we were.”

— Robin Sacredfire

4. “A mad person without the capacity for self-analysis or the support of professional therapy, is like a bullet train without breaks heading for a cliff. Everyone on board, spouses included, will finish themselves before they can stop it.”

— Robin Sacredfire

5. “A man told me that my thoughts are opinions, so I asked back if he knows the difference between facts and opinions. He couldn’t differentiate them. And I had to conclude I was talking with an arrogant lunatic. He did admit to be arrogant, but the conversation was over before I could prove him lunatic as well.”

— Robin Sacredfire

6. “A person can’t have enough money or more than that for as long as he can’t imagine having it all and losing it all at will. It is the fear of losing money that maintains an individual in a perpetual state of losing it. And this, as much as the desire to accumulate money without the capacity to duplicate the state of having it, maintains one in a repetitive loop imprisoning him in his present condition, and in which the world around him will deceive into thinking that the reasons for his misfortune are outwards.”

— Robin Sacredfire

7. “A person with knowledge may never find the truth, but a person with faith always finds the knowledge leading to truth.”

— Robin Sacredfire

8. “A slave works the whole day for free and is offered a bed to sleep and food to eat. An employee works the whole day for money in order to pay for his own bed and food. Do you see any difference here?”

— Robin Sacredfire

9. “A strong feeling of happiness and a strong instinct to do what is right will come to your life, when you are within your purpose and God’s purpose for you.”

— Robin Sacredfire

10. “A student who doesn’t study is certainly a student who feels embraced by the emotions of being a student, in the logical sense that whoever doesn’t study can only delay his life’s path, allowing such path to simultaneously increase.”

— Robin Sacredfire

11. “A very interesting paradox seen in individuals possessed by demons is that they are incredibly bright when analyzing others beyond appearances, but incredibly stupid when not noticing the obvious in front of their nose.”

— Robin Sacredfire

12. “After many years working as a successful author, I conclude that most people do not read to learn and change, but rather to reinforce their own paradigms, and feed their ego. Most readers are simply not qualified to judge what they read. Book reviews say more about who writes them than their purpose.”

— Robin Sacredfire

13. “After some time spent with me, people start saying: ‘It is as if you knew what I was thinking.’ They never consider this as a fact.”

— Robin Sacredfire

14. “After spending an entire life analyzing human behavior and spiritual nature, I have no doubt anymore that the ones opposing me are hated by God. And God hates almost the entire human race. A person like me on planet Earth is like a living test for mankind, to see who could change and who will not. After I’m gone, destruction is certainly a promise to those horrible souls. On the other hand, the chosen ones are so few, that rescuing them is far easier than I ever imagined possible. Every time I encounter one, his or her name is written on the list of those who will not stay behind.”

— Robin Sacredfire

15. “Alchemy: In times of recession it is not wise to argue about the price of gold.”

— Robin Sacredfire

16. "All actions start with emotions and in this principle we find the key to change."

— Robin Sacredfire

17. "All conversations with a dumb person turn into fights, because being dumb means not being able to process information, and communication is the most complex form of information."

— Robin Sacredfire

18. "All elements of reality provide positive or negative emotions, according to the connection we develop with them, directly or indirectly."

— Robin Sacredfire

19. All hatred and attacks on society and nature come from the minds and hands of individuals who are terribly afraid of others, of life; they fear their own weaknesses, and so, they attack what is perceived as stronger and more meaningful than them."

— Robin Sacredfire

20. "Although our body gets older, our spirit only experiences present time. Therefore, the question is: Why can we remember the past but not predict the future? And the answer is related to our purpose as a spiritual being. If we knew the future, we could easily avoid responsibility and delay our spiritual development."

— Robin Sacredfire

21. "An autobiography is the most valuable book an author can write."

— Robin Sacredfire

22. “An awakening must be feared and fought at all costs by the majority, because the majority knows that if anyone realizes their true intent, as in being to stop and destroy anyone better than them, they would inevitably be the target of destruction themselves.”

— Robin Sacredfire

23. “An entrepreneur is not someone who starts his own business. An entrepreneur is someone who realizes that he doesn’t want to live the rest of his life as a slave and decides to buy his own freedom. Starting a business is just a common consequence of such decision.”

— Robin Sacredfire

24. “An individual affected by lower frequency waves operates with a logic that doesn’t necessarily solves a problem. It is a process that guides the mind without self-awareness or critical thinking.”

— Robin Sacredfire

25. “An insane person is, basically, someone who isn’t true to himself and lives between the reality he understands and the distorted perspective of it that he is trying to control. And the bigger this gap is, the more you can be sure to be in front of a neurotic or psychotic individual.”

— Robin Sacredfire

26. “An opportunity always comes before a change. If you wait for a change to occur in order to grab an opportunity, you will lose all opportunities coming your way.”

— Robin Sacredfire

27. “Any person who tries to discourage you, is doing it because in fact wants the worse for you, and that is usually towards the fulfilling of her own purposes. Deep down that person respects you and only wishes to use you for personal reasons. That person is being influenced and the danger will diminish through time.”

— Robin Sacredfire

28. “Anyone can have access to knowledge but very few are chosen by the Divine Light to be guided.”

— Robin Sacredfire

29. “Anyone could be making much more money if more people were honest.”

— Robin Sacredfire

30. “Anyone is measured by what they do, rather than what they say. The background of a person or the books such person has acquired do not say anything about the value such individual possesses. If you cannot value anyone by what they show you, if you do not possess the courage to see beyond the illusion, you are as ignorant as the ones who claim not to be. Both, the one who seeks the light and the one who claims to have it, share the same darkness.”

— Robin Sacredfire

31. “Apart from comprehension, when there is a clear purpose, concentration also increases, because we have a goal in the activity we choose.”

— Robin Sacredfire

32. “Apple and apricot seeds contain a vitamin called B12, which I found to be illegal to sell in pharmacies. You can buy all kind of vitamins in pharmacies, but not B12. Why would the pharmaceutical industry make a vitamin that we can eat on our own, through seeds, illegal? I asked this question to employees in the pharmacies and many doctors, and they couldn’t answer. They just kept looking at me as if I was trying to get ingredients to make my own synthetic drugs. For most people, what is illegal is really illegal. Most people are too dull to think for themselves, even when a question is so obviously relevant that they seem to have brain damage when not realizing its importance.”

— Robin Sacredfire

33. “Arrogance is not a substitute for intelligence or personal worth. It is, very often, a camouflage, to hide lack of both.”

— Robin Sacredfire

34. “As a student, your ideal attitude must consist, not in minimizing the quantity of mistakes, but in increasing the possibility of error, and this, while increasing the level of knowledge about those same errors. In other words, the student that fears mistakes, has not learned enough.”

— Robin Sacredfire

35. “As everyone else, I also feared failure, and I also persisted in a certain direction because I did not want to quit. Today, however, I understand that failure is not only necessary but desirable. The best lessons in life will never be told by those who forget them or by those who wish not to remember them, for both the winner and the loser do not wish to remember their setbacks, their darkest moments. In both cases, they wish to forget their struggles. And yet, without those very dark and painful moments, they wouldn’t realize either that they are in the dark or that they want the light. Only through failure can one conquer truthfulness, honor and success. As a matter of fact, only through darkness will you truly know the light. Everyone is in the same path. Some people simply realize that there is only one way to go, and before others can see the same.”

— Robin Sacredfire

36. “As humans, we have learned to love and trust money, while losing love and trust for one another. That is how money became the anti-christian symbol of our world, opposing the christian alchemic transmutation taught by Jesus.”

— Robin Sacredfire

37. “As soon as you ascend to heaven in spirit, by being more spiritual and honest with yourself, you will notice that hell comes to you at the exact same time, and earth will literally feel like hell. Everyone who can't see it, went on the opposite direction, from crazy to crazier. They see butterflies instead of worms and juice instead of blood, and can't smell their own rotting flesh. They went from surviving to becoming zombies. That's why I despise the vast majority of those who consider themselves spiritual. They are in fact lunatics disguised as saints.”

— Robin Sacredfire

38. “As with a child, the mind of an adult is predisposed for destruction in the name of self-awareness. The question you may then ask is if that destruction is aimed at good or evil. And upon contemplating the actions of such adult, you will certainly see that occurring, for he is either attacking his ignorance or the wisdom of others, strengthening his jealousy or his admiration for what he perceives, feeling appreciative, joyful and thankful, or weak, resentful and fearful.”

— Robin Sacredfire

39. “Ask the person who found you about what kind of people she was looking for before meeting you, as she may not know that she has found one of them already.”

— Robin Sacredfire

40. “Beauty does not last forever and neither does love. But love can last a lifetime and beauty, despite any effort, never will. Therefore, one should assume that love is more important than lust.”

— Robin Sacredfire

41. “Before asking yourself why the law of attraction doesn't work, ask yourself if you're an arrogant and selfish human being. God does not like them.”

— Robin Sacredfire

42. “Before you hate, make sure you do not possess the same traits of those you hate. Very often, our incongruences towards the outside world hide all the mysteries to our failures.”

— Robin Sacredfire

43. “Belief is the seed of any change; Love is the water; Faith is the sun.”

— Robin Sacredfire

44. “Beliefs shape the size of our opportunities. Love expands them beyond faith.”

— Robin Sacredfire

45. “Believe me, people do change and they change often and many times through their lifetime. However, due to naiveness, passivity and selfishness, they commonly change towards a more negative self, becoming less than they were. Positive changes are destined only to those who seek them. Our world is, by default, designed to bring us down. In order to move upwards, one must consciously seek to dream and manifest dreams, by learning, reading, asking meaningful questions and actively making connections with others. One must, at least, love.”

— Robin Sacredfire

46. “Between a monkey and a snake, the one who resists change the most is the snake. You can hardly domesticate a snake and make it your trustworthy friend. And so, taking into consideration that most people refuse to change their attitude, and instead decide to discriminate others and act as enemies to the human race as a whole, in their selfishness, competitiveness and egotistical stubbornness, without empathy or compassion for others, they are acting like reptiles, not mammals. We have too much of reptile-thinking inside the human race; and the distance between our reality and a fiction movie about an alien invasion, in which reptiles walk among us disguised as humans isn't that much. We have been corrupted already. Humanity is nearly extinct due to a massive invasion of a reptilian belief-system.”

— Robin Sacredfire

47. “Between our mind and an object, there is nothing else than self-developed concepts.”

— Robin Sacredfire

48. “Books are the staircase to heaven. The more you read, the more you understand the world that God created.”

— Robin Sacredfire

49. “Books can change the world. They represent a second chance to those who want to change their life and can't do it on their own.”

— Robin Sacredfire

50. “Both, the one who seeks the light and the one who claims to have it, may share the same darkness, for a blind man explaining the world to another blind man is still a blind man.”

— Robin Sacredfire

51. “Bubble: A safe space where people who don't like to be confronted with the consequences of their actions live. Often known as the perfect environment for those who are too immature to assume responsibility for their lack of realistic perception, and instead focus their energy in maintaining a flawless image to the outside world, while hiding their real thoughts, quite usually very sadistic and selfish. Bubbles can easily blast when a small portion of truth or justified anger hits one, so people that live inside a bubble are particularly sensitive to those who tell them things they can't comprehend, even, and in particular, when such things are correlated with their immoral social behavior. And as people that live inside a bubble need the bubble as much as they fear the outside world, they often blend unrelated words with their own nonsense to keep the danger of having a bubble exploded far from sight. This includes being a hypocrite when calling one ungrateful, offending someone while calling such individual aggressive, and using negative depreciation with arguments that fit their agenda of keeping themselves within ignorance while bringing others further to that paradox. People who live in the bubble believe anything they hear but always assume that their beliefs are independent, as the bubble stops them from seeing further and admitting something they can't see or accept. Therefore, until the moment in which people will be happy to have a microchip attached to their brain and virtual reality headsets stopping them from seeing the world as it is, the bubble will be known as a transitory stage, between an unempathetic dumbness and being a brainless humanoid vegetal on two legs.”

— Robin Sacredfire

52. “By putting my trust in God and my love in the alchemical transmutation, which working on my dreams leads me to, I was able to attract ideas, and those ideas inspired me to create something new. That which I created was a product, with value.”

— Robin Sacredfire

53. “Cognitive dissonance occurs when I say what I do for a living and get as a reply: ‘That’s a bad pickup line.’”

— Robin Sacredfire

54. “Concepts like millionaire and money are abstract and part of a delusional world, so you won’t be able to understand the application of the knowledge if you keep thinking with the same paradigm that made you poor.”

— Robin Sacredfire

55. “Consciousness is acquired through the realization that life is a cycle of giving and receiving, in which we can only receive from what we produce to others.”

— Robin Sacredfire

56. “Consciousness is merely an awakening. The spirit is already conscious.”

— Robin Sacredfire

57. “Considering the fact that a human being has, as a life objective, the learning of himself, and knowing spirituality through his life experience, the meaning of life can be resumed in the development of a higher consciousness.

— Robin Sacredfire

58. “Crying is for the eyes as sorrow is for the heart. Both are natural cleansing processes. But you’ll more likely see a christian crying than a banker, because one has indoctrinated himself into the idea of being a sheep, while the other has educated himself into thinking like a wolf.”

— Robin Sacredfire

59. “Death comes when renovation isn't being allowed in order to force it.”

— Robin Sacredfire

60. “Deceptive positivism occurs when I say many things about a person hoping that I am wrong, and that person goes one step further to show me that I am more right than I ever imagined possible.”

— Robin Sacredfire

61. “Demons manifest themselves through the eyes of the possessed during your first moments of awakening. The wicked and psychopathic minds follow, with behaviors attempting to segregate you, isolate you and suppress you. But when you are truly enlightened, even the most religious and spiritual ones on Earth will feel enraged by your existence, for you will shine light on their weaknesses with your presence and reveal their level of ignorance and insanity with your words.”

— Robin Sacredfire

62. “Despite the experiences that put me in the spotlight as the co-creator of my wisdom, the human part of me keeps burning, like an alchemical process which I both accept and want to refuse. I'm changing the world as much as this world is changing me. The two are inseparable.”

— Robin Sacredfire

63. “Despite what you might think, normal people do not cause problems, misfortunes, conflicts, distress or accidents. And when they do, they can apologize and recognize their negative influence. A person who causes these things and can't assume any responsibility for them is, apart from showing the cognitive and moral level of a child, deserving nothing more than abandonment, because she's dangerous at all levels and can hurt, or even kill, someone by accident, including herself and whoever is with her. A person like this does not deserve any trust for absolutely anything."

— Robin Sacredfire

64. "Developing a business depends on many factors. But you should basically understand the exchange between value. In other words, you must provide value to receive equal value. If you look at most single people, you can see that they can't provide any value – they often don't smile, dress, talk or behave in a way that makes others want to spend time, much less a lifetime, with them. Relationships and businesses are not much different. In a business, people know that appearance and the way you talk to a customer is as important as the value of your product, and that's why brands sell, even when their products have no quality. For example, in shopping malls you can see some shops packed with people buying clothes that have no value and will be ruined or out of fashion very soon, because such brands are selling an image, not quality anymore. Some countries, on the other hand, managed to compete in the world market by reducing price over quality, and are now paying the cost of a very bad reputation, as most people don't trust their brands anymore. This is already impacting the world economy, so I don't know what will happen in the next years. It is all in the hands of politicians and the internationalization of the companies. And yet, I just said this to illustrate the relation between value and product. But here's another example: I tried to share what I know about learning with teachers, parents and psychologists, and nobody cared. Besides, what I earned in helping children with learning disabilities was a very low payment, and I had to quit that as I couldn't afford to pay an apartment and daily expenses with such job. However, there are people making thousands of dollars with drugs that have no effect, toilets for cats and pet-rocks. In other words, it is never about what the world needs but what the world wants. And this freewill is within a law that puts it before value. Freewill sets value in motion. And that is why people tend to find excuses for their failures, as if maintaining their social value by changing the rules that classify the level of their self-determinism. In other words, lack of determinism is nothing more than an exteriorization of stupidity, i.e., the knowing that one can't succeed and the giving up on trying to find why."

— Robin Sacredfire

65. "Differences between poor and rich people: Poor people ask me where's my money from; Rich people invite me for a coffee and never ask it."

— Robin Sacredfire

66. "Do more for those who help you than you do for yourself. They are doing for you what you can't do for yourself."

— Robin Sacredfire

67. "Do not assume that you know what love is, until you learn what respect is; and do not assume that you're a good person, if you don't know what is empathy. Until you can love yourself, and feel compassion for the suffering of another person, you will not be able to love anyone. You can feel love but you can't love. To feel and to do is not the same. You can choose to feel love and share anger, or feel love and share compassion."

— Robin Sacredfire

68. “Do not attempt to help those who have not asked for your help. Interfering with their karma will result in a never-ending spiritual war from which you can only lose.”

— Robin Sacredfire

69. “Do not expect to find abundance and a higher level of truth by following the poor mindset of the majority. You will always find it in words like bestseller, famous or most popular. The poor love the ideas and concepts that keep them poor.”

— Robin Sacredfire

70. “Do not judge others before judging yourself. That is a grave mistake, and often the main reason to why people can't find love.”

— Robin Sacredfire

71. “Do not preach me on how much my friends don't like to hear my problems. If they're associated with me to hear only about my successes, my gains and achievements, they are parasites, and must be pulled out from my life as fast as I would kill a virus inside my body.”

— Robin Sacredfire

72. “Do not tell me how much money you make. I do not care about that. Do not tell me about how many cars you own or countries you visited. It doesn't tell me anything about you. Tell me instead about how you think and which beliefs you treasure the most. Then, I will be able to tell you who you are, who you can be, and who you will become.”

— Robin Sacredfire

73. “Do not try to explain the normal. Normal was never normal.”

— Robin Sacredfire

74. “Do not try to solve your problems. Surpass them by growing and becoming better tomorrow than you were yesterday. That’s why problems exist. They are there to make you evolve. Depression is just a word that lazy and weak people invented to justify their unwillingness or incapacity to evolve.”

— Robin Sacredfire

75. “Do you deserve it? Do I deserve it? These are questions that don’t require an answer because they shouldn’t be made. Live life to your will and let others judge the results as they want. They’ll probably never understand, and that’s why they are they and not you.”

— Robin Sacredfire

76. “Do you wish to know who are the blind? I will tell you. They believe in only one book, in only one power, in only one authority and in only one perspective. They are blind to the fact that everything and anything they know is the size of a grain of rice in the vast amount of variables and multitude of complexities that God has created. A slightly higher awareness would easily drive them insane for life.”

— Robin Sacredfire

77. “Doing business has much more to do with war than education. Most people are not logical but intuitive in their choices. Their values are fruit of years of indoctrination and their virtues are ignored, and as much as they insult the most virtuous and valuable they encounter if, and only if, they can ever recognize such extremely rare souls. In other words, you do more for yourself if you act like you are a warrior and your life is a battlefield. You do more for others by punishing them with emotional pain, the same or more as what they make you feel. I wish I could say things are or could be different, but this is not paradise, this is planet Earth. If you create a paradise on Earth, you will find yourself isolated most of the times, simply because most people are like demons creating their own hell. What others claim to be normal, is only normal if you want to be in hell.”

— Robin Sacredfire

78. “Don’t ask me why I know the future. Ask me why you should know it.”

— Robin Sacredfire

79. “Don’t pay attention to the people who hate you but to why they do, as that’s where you find your real value and uniqueness.”

— Robin Sacredfire

80. “Don’t work harder; learn faster. Invest in the reality you want, not the reality you have. Know yourself, and you will know your path to success.”

— Robin Sacredfire

81. “Don’t be afraid to feel lost. If you want God to paint a new dream in your life, you will need to let him erase and clean everything else you have first. We can only paint something new on a white canvas. You can’t paint a new life on a canvas that has been already painted, with beliefs, attachments, values and a certain self-image, all of which are unaligned with the dream you have set in motion by desire. God has to paint what is new on a white canvas; and that’s why you need to lose it all in order to have it all. And the more ambitious you are, the more often you will have to experience a restart, a new beginning, foreseeing the abandonment of the old within you. Your friends, your house, your job, and everything else that belongs to a fixed environment, belongs to a painting which you have dreamed once, but won’t be part of the future you dream in your present state. It is very difficult to dream the new while inside the old, to recreate within what has been made, to rebuild without destroying, to create without breaking, to have a bright new future without losing the old past. The rules of this planet apply to building a chair as much as they apply to building a life.”

— Robin Sacredfire

82. “Don’t be afraid to quit; but don’t quit because you are afraid.”

— Robin Sacredfire

83. “Dreams and Imagination are the food of the soul for good people and also their source of energy.”

— Robin Sacredfire

84. “During my entire life, everyone has tried to convince me that I couldn’t change the world. But the answer depends on which world are we talking about. Because every month over thirty thousand humans read my books. The world is being changed by me, despite the many who have still not read my work and can’t see one of the big forces behind the changes occurring.”

— Robin Sacredfire

85. “During your entire life, you will be presented with three options: Only two are visible. You have the option to accept or reject, to say yes or say no. These will always be obvious. The third option is the one to change the other two options; the chance to change the circumstances that force you to make choices, to change the nature of your choices.”

— Robin Sacredfire

86. “Dying for the world is not noble in anyway but a disgrace for the rest of the world itself, for those who don’t do absolutely anything to support, help or even bleed. It’s like going to war alone, while our friends cheer and applaud from the distance. It’s not fun and doesn’t make me proud in any way. Most so-called spiritual individuals in this world, are not spiritual; they think they are, but they're brain-dead, they are living their own fantasies, but not truly bleeding for life. And so, it's quite interesting when my friends do all they can to stop me from leaving them, from changing country, while at the same time, they give me no reason to justify being attached to them."

— Robin Sacredfire

87. "Enlightenment isn't the end but the beginning, the start of a journey that a small group of people begun while the rest sleeps."

— Robin Sacredfire

88. "Even the smallest of our actions can have a great impact."

— Robin Sacredfire

89. "Every action starts with emotions and in this principle we find the key to change."

— Robin Sacredfire

90. "Any exercise you do, every five minutes of meditation you practice, and every book you read, makes you a better person; and it is better to improve for thirty minutes a day, than to fall into a constant and perpetual degradation of body and mind."

— Robin Sacredfire

91. "Every human being creates the reality in which he believes."

— Robin Sacredfire

92. "Every single choice that you make along the path of your existence will transform you into someone. Make sure you know what you're doing. The more alcohol you take, the more you promote a life of disregard for self. The more drugs you take, the more you promote a life of emotional immaturity. The more meat you consume, the more you promote a life conditioned by fear and anxiety.”

— Robin Sacredfire

93. “Every single person I met and knew I wrote books, made fun of me. And, most of my teachers said I don't have talent to write. I had to create a way when no way was at sight. And believing was what put more than two hundred of my books in best selling lists. This said, should I really care about what others think? No. But, it's true that the less I care, the more those others seem to get angry, upset and confused. And again, I let it go, and I let them go too, as they represent another stage in this process of learning how to become myself. I should have actually let it all go long time ago, but I was still too afraid to do it. This, until I realized that 99% of the population is, unadmittingly, the same, equal to one another, and sharing, with more or less theories and reason, with more or less sophisticated knowledge, nothing more than mass opinion. I had to study the 1% representing what I wished to become. Once I did, my fears vanished.”

94. “Everyone in this world wants money but almost nobody even deserves to be alive. Most people exist with the sole mission of making the life of others more difficult so that they themselves can feel better with their miserable existence.”

102. “Few coffee shops have books, fewer have good books, and even less will have one book that can change your whole life. Now, the question is: How many people can find that book? And, among those who do, how many will read it? Because, you see, life always provides opportunities, but not many can see them, when they're just there, waiting to be found, when they come our way, even if in the most unexpected place in the world. One has to be very sharp to recognize a window of opportunity inside a wall of illusions. And the ability to redirect attention, demands that one can be capable as well of knowing his own limitations inside a vast sea of energy and vibrations. Now, I could be talking about a book, a group, or a person, as the axiom remains true to itself.”

105. “Find someone who either admires you or has enough self-esteem, to share your life with, or you'll be invalidated forever, fail and be blamed for your failures. Love is a beautiful thing but humans can't love with the heart, if their mind isn't synchronized with it.”

107. “For every negative remark you make on another person, you should add three positive ones, from which at least one is a suggestion that can correct what you observe, as no house of wood can be built by looking at, and complaining about, the ugly trees, no society can evolve based on what the dead did not do, no painter can paint while looking at the paintings he dislikes, and no knowledge can be acquired by the mind that refuses to empty itself first.”

109. “For many people, money is an index of how successful one is, and so, they fear competition and attach themselves to their shadows. Such path drives one towards materialism rather than spiritualism. But what’s the difference between such individuals and those who work in the hope of quitting their job? Well, the main difference is that, materialistic people separate the two realities in the hope that they can earn money from the work they love and then quit the work they don’t like; and by creating such division, they remain there, in the middle, trapped. They think that, by following what they love to do, step by step, they’ll be guided towards the right direction. But if their thoughts were clearer, they would know that they’re dividing themselves and perpetuating their fate, rather than solving it. They neglect the mental barriers stopping them from achieving their purpose. And anyone is responsible for determining the result one holds in his thoughts. In other words, if you had not made such division in the first place, and instead accepted the lack of duality, you would achieve your goals much faster. That is the reason why nearly all entrepreneurs rather work harder and be poor when starting a business, instead of waiting for the right time to quit their job. There's no such thing as the right time, or a shift from one reality unto another, because you create both things, your fortune and your misfortune, and also your own luck and results, every single time. Whatever you believe in present time, perpetuates that same present time into the future."

113. "Getting drunk every Friday night and thinking that this is normal, only to get mad every Monday morning, looks normal only because most people are insane. It becomes abnormal when it affects your relationships and you push people you want away with a smile, only to cry when they're gone. That's when a person should question her own sanity. If that still doesn't make one question it, then that's a very deep stage of madness. That's not life. That's the scenario for a very dramatic movie."

Then, He boosts your vitality, so that you might still be able to do something for yourself, but you conform to your lifestyle and habits. Then, He ignores you, until you realize, through your own suffering, that you've offended Him in all these ways.”

Many women do not understand that their beauty is a lost prize from the start, and that they should focus on something immortal to build their own social worth. As a matter of fact, feminism has greatly diminished the only thing that made such race interesting for men.”

129. “Here's a resume of crucial knowledge you should have in today's world but universities are not providing: Financial - Not just on management, but also on how to profit, how to strategize and control flows of income; Linguistic - In today's world, speaking only one language shows lack of education, knowing two languages is a basic necessity, and knowing three languages is essential, while knowing four is merely the ideal situation. Which four languages? Chinese, English, Spanish, and another of your choice, just for fun; Intellectual - It's not about what you know but how you think about what you know. It is ridiculous to assume that there's only one answer and one way to examine life. Most postgraduates are extremely incompetent because they lack the ability to educate themselves, despite their certificates or where they've studied. They never read with an intention in mind. And once they graduate, they become completely futile as individuals. This situation is the same all over the world. Millions are graduating every year, without any significant knowledge to live with. Their books are often outdated once they finish college and they're unable to learn by themselves and develop the necessary skills to adjust to the economic society in which we live. Maybe they can keep a job for three or five years of their life, but are then surprised to lose it and never find a suitable job again. The world is changing very fast and most people can't or are unwilling to recognize this fact."

130. "Hitler killed the Jews as much as the Jews killed themselves by not creating riots and violent opposition against Hitler. As a human race, we won't evolve until we start accepting these facts, instead of pointing fingers at one another and blaming those whom we have allowed to gain power and maintain it."

132. "Honesty and kindness can do much more for the world than anything else. And logic will always be weak without a strong heart. That is why the wisest tend to suffer the most from heartbreak. One cannot reach for God in His wisdom with the heart of a devil."

134. “How do I know that I am a good writer? Every single time I arrive or leave my hometown, I’m the only passenger being checked for drugs.”

— Robin Sacredfire

135. “How do you explain to someone who caused you to have an accident that it is her fault and she should apologize? You don’t. Because people who can apologize do not cause accidents. Non-apologists can’t assume responsibility for fear of admitting their own mistakes and stupidity, they can’t process shame, and they are often comfortable with anger, irritability, and emotional distance, and believe that experiencing emotional closeness and vulnerability is extremely threatening. I.e., they don’t have empathy, they don’t feel sympathy and they love nobody except their own egotistical and exaggerated view of themselves.”

— Robin Sacredfire

136. “How to face reality? Don’t. Everyone has the right to live inside an imaginary world.”

— Robin Sacredfire

137. “Humans are so obsessed with reincarnating, living their own stories and experiencing different personalities, that whatsoever you tell them, they will want to be a part of it. Whatever you describe others, becomes the story they want to recreate with you. Never will you find on Planet Earth a single human being able to go beyond this mindset, because the structure of their brain is what keeps them on the planet itself. You are not a victim of your past as much as you allow others to keep you there by letting them know it.”

— Robin Sacredfire

138. “Human beings haven't evolved because it's easier to put a human in a rat-wheel called job than a monkey on the moon.”

— Robin Sacredfire

139. “Human beings only learn by observing and copying. What does this really mean? It means that your friends will only tell you that your ideas are great once you succeed and never before that. Expecting someone's approval is a waste of time.”

— Robin Sacredfire

140. “Human stupidity is one of the greatest mysteries of life. Can be frustrating to deal with, often leads to misunderstandings between friends, breaks relationships apart, but can make smart people extremely rich.”

— Robin Sacredfire

141. “Human values never vanish between lives. They are born with us in every reincarnation to teach us the lessons we failed to learn in previous existences, either they're related to dogma, justice, loneliness, love, darkness or light.”

— Robin Sacredfire

142. “Humility and Dignity had a daughter, called Arrogance, who was ashamed of her name and used to hide behind Pride. But Pride was in love with Truth, therefore arrogance married Illusion and forever despised Truth. Pride and Truth had a daughter, called Happiness, while Arrogance and Illusion had a son, called Despair. When both meet, one of them cries.”

— Robin Sacredfire

143. "I am very intrigued by those who consider themselves spiritual but have no religious knowledge and don't think they need any. Very often, their journey starts and ends with one or a few mainstream books they have found in their local library. What intrigues me the most is their extreme sensitivity to spiritual topics that they don't understand and don't think they should be understanding. They are like schizophrenics who truly believe to have an exclusive relation with God."

— Robin Sacredfire

144. "I asked a UFO fanatic if he believes extraterrestrials could live among humans on earth. He laughed and answered that this would be impossible, for they are much higher beings. But well, first he was talking to one among many who has come; and second, his, as any other human DNA, is not entirely from Earth. And yet, he considered that there is a separation between him and extraterrestrial beings; and it was this idea of separation that drove him away from my life but also from his own. He was deeply insane."

— Robin Sacredfire

145. "I believe in easy love but I don't think it belongs to planet earth."

— Robin Sacredfire

146. "I can catch demons but people cry when I do that. And then I'm blamed for trying to control them. How convenient that the excuse of someone trapped in hell is that I'm manipulating her into getting out of it. That's how they see help; as an attack that must be responded with pain. They can't see that their soul is in the hands of Satan already. He is the one instigating their fears and anger, as if they were just a puppet. They can't see that I pay a very heavy emotional, mental and physical price, every time I try to rescue one of the trapped souls, every time I love someone who doesn't know what love is anymore."

— Robin Sacredfire

147. “I can’t build a castle on sand and mud. There are steps that need to be followed. But there are no in-betweens. You either own your life or you let someone own it for you. A business is not a job. You have to work a lot for nothing, in order to earn a lot while doing nothing. You don’t work to have work. That’s a job. In business, you work in order not to have work. And it’s this nonlogical thinking that sets apart the entrepreneurs, the leaders, the authors and founders, from the rest, the followers, the slaves, the sheep, the masses, or, to be more politically correct, the common opinion.”

— Robin Sacredfire

148. “I could doubt the value of my books as much as many do, except that, as a researcher and very curious person, I do read a lot too, and can clearly see the difference in value between what I do and what others do. I have no doubt that my books have much more value than many others out there, and it wouldn’t make sense for me to be an author if I couldn’t see that, or if I saw the opposite, for I believe that, if we’re not upgrading mankind, we’re just making it lost and vulnerable to the claws of ignorance.”

— Robin Sacredfire

149. “I do not expect everyone to like me; but I would be extremely surprised if a person who I consider highly spiritual, a person who I properly evaluate and conclude to be mentally healthy and very sane, a person who is mostly and foremost good at heart, hated me. This is an impossibility, as I have confirmed after traveling the whole world and meeting thousands of human beings. Evil and good do not resonate at the same frequency, and that is what disgust, distrust and lower affinity mean. And so, we are then allowed to conclude that, whoever loves everyone, does not know himself, and whoever hates everyone, does not understand the purpose of life; but one who can see this polarity and interfere with its order without being a part of it, has transcended the trap of attachment, a trap which can only be conquered once we conquer our need for a personality and the attachment to the ego; a trap from which nobody seeking for selfish gains in the wilderness of attachment can escape from. Only then, such enlightened soul will understand that the outer world is merely reflecting the inner world, and a person cannot conquer one without conquering the other. In other words, the spirit must conquer the personality, as much as the personality must accept the spirit, for victory over life to come as much as we reach for it. Only when a marriage between the willpower of the personality with the sensitive loving need of the spirit is accomplished, can a human being transcend his nature, and in doing so, transcend the nature of the world.”

— Robin Sacredfire

150. “I don't believe in countries, governments, institutions or borders. I believe in people. When someone asks for my passport, I feel insulted.”

— Robin Sacredfire

151. “I don't fully know what love is. I don't think anybody I ever met does. People do have theories about it. It's amazing how humans love to fabricate theories and opinions on topics they know nothing about. Many times it seems that people are more obsessed towards expressing themselves on the things they don't know, rather than honestly sharing what they know. It's impressive how arrogance commonly hides selfishness in the backstage; as if arrogance was the forefront of a desperate need to unselfish oneself. In this sense, if I look back at the books I wrote, all the books I ever wrote on relationships and love, I would clearly realize that they need to be rewritten. They are not necessarily wrong in their core, but they may not be very helpful too, in a highly complex and “brain-obsessed” society as it is this on planet earth. Solutions on a mentally enslaved planet are like the sun seen behind bars to those in a prison cell. Within this perspective, we can see that humans are both consciously and unconsciously correct, in both their humane and inhumane actions and words, and being fully honest too, when rejecting it. For they need the key to their freedom more than they need the sun. To these souls, the heart is further apart than the sun or the key to their freedom. They can only talk about it, as if it was a myth, just like prehistoric tribes, when addressing their own folklore.”

— Robin Sacredfire

152. “I don't know from where human beings take their sense of importance, their arrogance, They are like sand in the desert. They are nothing. When I look at humans at the light of everything I know, about life, they are truly nothing. Their sense of importance is nothing more than a heavy and profound mass schizophrenia.”

— Robin Sacredfire

153. “I don't know why so many of my fans assume that I'm a better person than them. They're not alone in their challenges. In fact, I think that the more I know, the harder it gets to handle humanity. With every challenge I overcome, comes a new one that throws me back to the ground again. Every time I start thinking that I'm invincible, I'm defeated. And I don't trust anyone who isn't living inside the same cycle, because that's what evolution is. Whatsoever my books truthfully promote, they also hide in the depths of your emotional response to whatever happens to you.”

— Robin Sacredfire

154. “I don't know why so many people stress over their life purpose. Obviously, they will never find it if looking into the bucket of life's illusions. Their life purpose is their next step, their next barrier, their immediate challenge to overcome. It can be raising a child properly, cooking a nice meal for their spouse, or reading a good book. Once this next purpose is done, they can just pick a new one. Surely, some purposes may seem too far out of reach, but it's still better to die trying and doing something than to live without any goals. And if you're out of ideas, then buy some food to offer to the homeless and the birds. That's a simple life goal that can make anyone feel happy, accomplished and stronger.”

— Robin Sacredfire

155. “I don't need anything anymore, as most people do, not even a job. I could lose it all and recreate everything again, very easily. And that's a great feeling.”

— Robin Sacredfire

156. “I don't need you to believe me, but if you did, your life could be far much more amazing. Because the real world, reality, is much and far more than what your eyes can reach.”

— Robin Sacredfire

157. “I feel uncomfortable with the words DEMOcracy, SOCIALism and COMMUNism. Common social demonocracy?”

— Robin Sacredfire

158. “I find it quite intriguing that the one observing me as different, immediately assumes that there's something wrong with me, but never, not even for one instant, questions the possibility of the opposite. It's truly amazing that the ones with more certainties, the most arrogant and the most selfish, are indeed the most stupid inside society. They are so dumb and ignorant that they can't see a writer in front of their nose. And the more the writer types, talks and thinks, the more they assume that this separation, this difference, grants them some form of superiority. Indeed, the light pushes demons into hell. The brighter your light, the faster you differentiate others. The way of the light was never meant for the weak, which are a majority. And this majority will always ignore the light, as demons fearing and hating angels. And so, it's interesting that without artists God would not have a way to reach for the world. And yet, without the ignorant, Satan wouldn't have a way to stop God."

— Robin Sacredfire

159. "I find it very interesting to notice that women who had sex with strangers, as well as many one night stands, feel insulted and disgusted by men who had sex with prostitutes, and furthermore, believe that any form of sexual activity, either with one or more strangers, and without any form of payment involved, is perfectly normal, but think that prostitution is not. I wonder if they are trying to take prostitutes out of business as part of a mysterious divine conspiracy printed within their subconscious mind to raise society into a love level through deception and guilt-free pleasure."

— Robin Sacredfire

160. "I find most of my friends very pathetic, and that's why I rather keep meeting new people. They rather spend their time reading books about people that have died long time ago than learning from me and paying for my books. And it's precisely their inability to perceive value that makes them useless, not only to me, but to themselves as well. Their life goes nowhere because of their attitude to it. They are stuck inside their own ignorance, no matter how many books they may read."

— Robin Sacredfire

161. "I hate positive people. They always criticize negative people."

— Robin Sacredfire

162. "I have found the reason to why people suffer. It's in their ego. It's in themselves. It's who they are. They don't deserve the suffering, but they surely need it. People who suffer are too stubborn to realize that they don't know what they assume to know. They hold on aggressively to their beliefs when confronted and even more when such beliefs are threatened. Therefore, they have to suffer for their beliefs. Until they change their beliefs, they will remain in suffering, and very likely suffer much more, in more ways, and more deeply."

— Robin Sacredfire

163. "I have met hundreds of men and women who claim to know God and possess wisdom. However, I have never met one who can prove both affirmations through their way of living."

— Robin Sacredfire

164. "I have met the Freemasons and the Rosicrucians, and I know, for a fact, that although they speak of the light and even, in some cases, consider themselves enlightened, they all live in the darkness. I have not met a single one of them who possesses the light. God may be compassionate of some but has abandoned them all."

— Robin Sacredfire

165. "I have no respect for the ones who have been blinded by arrogance, wherever I find them, for God has abandoned them to their challenges, rituals and practices, whatever they may be. My path may cross theirs but only for as long as that complies a meaning for each side. My fate won't be theirs and that I know, as soon as I find them blind."

— Robin Sacredfire

166. “I have noticed that most people don’t use more than a pea size equivalent of their brain. They can’t process more than one idea at a time. If I say that my grandparents were from Switzerland and then I was born somewhere else, they will forget about that somewhere else and focus on Switzerland; If I say that my name originates in the South of France before saying my nationality, it becomes irrelevant as well. And I’m surprised at how many people get offended when I tell them that I can easily brainwash them with new ideas and convince them that I’m right. It’s not my fault but theirs, for not knowing how to think. They shouldn’t blame the overthinker but the underthinker. And yet, I hear so many times this explanation for any kind of problem: ‘You think too much.’ Everything serves as an excuse to remain a fool. And then the majority wonders why getting a job is so difficult for them. It’s not for overthinkers. I used to be called for job interviews because I was a rule breaker; I would hide my age and be called because the interviewer wanted to ask how old I am; or paint the titles of my CV in blue and be called because it was the first to be noticed among thousands in only black and white. The only problem about overthinking is that you will eventually overcome the norm. That’s why I don’t need a job anymore; I have outthought the majority.”

— Robin Sacredfire

167. “I judge the quality of my work by the quality of the people who follow it. If my readers are the most amazing people on Earth, I am surely doing a very good job and I have the right to be proud about it.”

— Robin Sacredfire

168. “I know many people who want to experience love without loving another person, like a soccer player who wants to play soccer without ever kicking the ball.”

— Robin Sacredfire

169. "I live with the constant awareness of three realities: The material world, my emotional world and my mental world. But I don't worry much about the first."

— Robin Sacredfire

170. "I love money because money is power, the power to invite my friends for lunch and pay the bill without expecting anything in return, the power to give twenty dollars to a beggar just because I can, the power to offer an expensive toy to children and make them smile, the power to wait for the ones you love to love you back just because you don't need to waste your time like they do."

— Robin Sacredfire

171. "I love to share my problems with friends. They think I'm revealing my personal life, but I'm actually revealing theirs. What a person does with what you give, reveals the real character of such person, and you can envision and predict a whole set of interactions through their life and based on such reactions. You can even predict how long their marriage will last, or what they will do when you need them."

— Robin Sacredfire

172. "I love speaking to five people at the same time, making them pay attention to me while not allowing them to say a word. I answer them before they have a chance to speak. They then change their thoughts and I do it again. They feel both frustrated and hooked to the conversation. I feel both entertained and amused at their disbelief on what is occurring before their eyes. They cannot see that I'm communicating in three ways at the same time, while they're focused in one. And they think I'm smart because I talk too fast, while the truth is that they are not intelligent because they cannot see the obvious in front of their eyes."

— Robin Sacredfire

173. “I make more money now than I ever did with any job I had; I make more money than anyone in my family; And I make that money sleeping. I can basically do whatever I want with my time. But I did not get to this level in one day or thirty days. It is not money coming from a salary or a lottery game; It was not made through contracts or luck. It was made through businesses and art. Likewise, I will not get to ten times more than what I do right now within one year. But most people don’t believe I ever will. People only see what they want to see. Nobody believed me when I was struggling without any income from my books for several years. Nobody believes me now, when I say that I will make ten times more in the future. And I don’t care. You know why? Because most people still don’t believe I wrote more than three hundred books, produced over one hundred and seventy songs, and started more than ten businesses. Many hypocrites still ask online distributors to investigate me and remove my books, claiming they are copies; many others still think I sell drugs or do something else illegal for a living. So what should I say about that majority I encounter wherever I go? I like my life a lot, and I like it so much, that I ended all relationships that were against it. I like my life simply because I am above almost everyone on this planet. This is a fact, which as I know now, scares that majority that wishes it wasn’t. But I don’t even care about my superiority. I just love life; I can DJ, I can produce a huge variety of music, I can teach martial arts, I can write books, I can create websites, start any business, learn anything, and even design clothes and sell clothes designed by me, which is something I have done as well. I can be successful in truly anything I choose to do. I don’t even have the time to explain myself to others or prove them whatsoever. It is a waste of time to explain my life rather than living it. And I don’t care what people think about me, what type of gossips they create, and how much they try to make me look bad, because their thoughts have zero importance. And that’s the root of their discomfort; their opinion doesn’t count for anything.

Furthermore, if people don't respect me, I move on, and leave them behind. I do not have any obligation to justify my potential to those who feel inferior to me. Their misery is not my responsibility. On the other hand, they would not be so miserable, if they got busy reading my books, rather than insulting me; If they worked for me for free, rather than expecting me to freely tell them what I do for a living and how to have the life they want. But that's what the miserable will never do, and that's why they insult and question, and judge. That's what makes them miserable. That's why the miserable deserve not even a reply. The miserable are selfish, irresponsible, lazy, cruel, insulting and disrespectful, and that's why they deserve their misery."

— Robin Sacredfire

174. "I may be a famous writer but when white people clinch to their wallet and stare at me with scorn I need to ask my skin why."

— Robin Sacredfire

175. "I need health much more than anything else. Luck, I can create at will."

— Robin Sacredfire

176. "I never ended any relationship. I was alone and someone came to make me company. Someone came all the time. And my life was made easier with their company. But I was alone. If I wasn't alone, nothing would have ended. Nothing could have ended if it had started. But it never did. That's why it ended. What stays forever never really has a beginning; it just is."

— Robin Sacredfire

177. "I never had to plan what to write and I never calculated the amount of money I can make with books. Since I started writing, God has put inside my life more experiences, knowledge and interesting people than what I can describe in my writings.”

— Robin Sacredfire

178. “I never understood why so many spiritual individuals, upon investigating me further, decide to call me angel. I always thought they were being delirious, until I understood their mental limitations. They simply don’t believe in aliens and don’t understand anything about life on other planets. A belief in angels is the best they can do.”

— Robin Sacredfire

179. “I once found an ego, crawling around and trying to shine on me. I took it in my arms and the ego turned itself into a virus. First it took over my mind, then my heart, and finally, it attempted to destroy my soul, by corrupting me with fear and guilt. Therefore, with as much energy as I could gather, I trapped the ego within my anger and pulled it out of me. Once on the floor, the ego begged me for mercy and compassion, promising to give me joy in return. I allowed it once again into my life, and again, it tried to hurt me once more, this time with abandonment. So I unveiled the ego for what it truly was, and it was resentment filled with desire for power, a power the ego was feeding from me, from my compassion and willingness. Now, unprotected of deceit, the ego shown itself weak and scared. In panic, it run from me, boasting a delusional victory. And when it looked back, searching for another chance, I stepped on it. But believe me, it hurt me far much more than it hurt the ego.”

— Robin Sacredfire

180. “I only know two types of readers: The vultures and the birds. The vultures are constantly reading books written by dead authors, can only enjoy rotting words, and disdain the knowledge of the living. Birds are those who enjoy every new book as if it was a miracle of nature and God.”

— Robin Sacredfire

181. “I pity those who suffer and humiliate themselves for the approval of others because they are truly stupid.”

— Robin Sacredfire

182. “I read books and researches on psychiatry and psychology for twenty years, and I’m called crazy by people who learn about mental health from talk shows. I have read thousands of books about life, but I’m called arrogant by people who don’t even have time to finish their novels. I have visited over thirty countries, but I’m called ignorant by people who base their conclusions on their own culture. I can make money from companies I founded, but I’m called lucky by those who don’t understand how their salary is made. I published nearly three hundred books, resuming knowledge that could fill an entire library, and I’m insulted the most by those who base all their knowledge on one book alone. Indeed, arguing with the ignorant is like planting seeds on rocks; You need plenty of faith and patience, and even these qualities are never enough for them. But what else should one expect from the ignorant except ignorance manifested in many forms?”

— Robin Sacredfire

183. “I respect the ignorance of others and I don't understand why they can't respect my knowledge.”

— Robin Sacredfire

184. “I spent a big portion of my life thinking that I was an Anarchist. It took me a while to realize how Anarchism was corrupted by those in power, fearful of the intelligence of the first Anarchists; nothing to compare with the Modern Neoliberal who has become a puppet at the hand of Globalists. It took me also a while to realize why Communism is perverse and the most damaging system on Earth. Nothing like living in a Communist country to realize that. It took me longer to realize how Socialism is nothing more than a bridge between Capitalists, Communists and Globalists. And so, today, I consider myself a Capitalist, simply because you can't fight power with poverty and you can't buy your freedom with compassion for the masses. And yet, if such thing as AnarchoCapitalism made any sense, I would position myself there, simply because freedom and compassion are only applicable when you don't need them anymore. The Anarchist who is true to his convictions is independent from any group, and the best among the Capitalists doesn't need Globalism to make his fortune. In other words, this world is nothing more than groups of fear fighting other groups of fear. Both groups opposing each other fear one another. Embrace both ideologies and you become free from both the fear and the oppression."

185. "I struggled for a lifetime of religious study, difficult decisions and plenty of hard work, to end up in heaven. I was very happy and fulfilled for a while, at peace with myself. All was perfect. But then, I was feeling depressed and very lonely in paradise. Very few souls were there, enjoying all the beauty it has to offer. The vast majority were in hell, a very cold and dark place, full of anger, violence and fear. And so, I decided to leave heaven and descend to hell for a visit. I saw that the daughters of those living in hell were beautiful, and I wished to marry one, and, if possible, bring her back with me to heaven. I stayed in hell in order to find love and, soon enough, I did. The one I fell in love with, was as beautiful as an angel, but behaved as a demon, showing me why she was in hell. In her previous life, she had been a prostitute, a drug addict and an alcoholic. But I loved her, and so I thought I could help her leave hell. I promised her joy for eternity, I took her with me to see paradise, and I taught her the secrets of the soul. Instead of accepting my offers, she used everything against me, to make me feel guilty, to confuse me, to stop me from flying, to make me feel depressed, humiliated and ashamed, to stop me from leaving, to destroy me; she even tried to seduce me with material pleasures and convince me to stay in hell with her. But I did not belong there and I could not take her with me. I was simply suffering, sharing hell with her. And we both cried because of love, but each one of us for different reasons, for we belonged to different places and we couldn't change that. Happiness made her scared, and emotional suffering was consuming my soul. Hell was too painful for me to have remained there. I had to let her go and return to heaven."

— Robin Sacredfire

186. "I thought I had lowered my standards pretty much, when I decided that any woman would be good for me as long as she respects me. It didn't take me long to realize that this would never happen. I was being naive about the real state of the world. It's not that one shouldn't have low standards, or high, or medium, but that most people are such a disgusting representation of themselves, that they can't stop being like this until they die. And maybe they do appreciate what they had when they lose it, but they quickly forget about it when getting it back. Forgiving people who apologize too often has been another naive behavior of mine."

— Robin Sacredfire

187. "I thought you can conquer an empire and everything else is fine. I was wrong. You may conquer your soul and your life, you may have enough for yourself and to share with others, but if you bring the wrong person in, and allow her to enter your reality, such person will, slowly but consistently, destroy everything you have, until nothing is left, not even your self-esteem or will to live. And how ironic that we are always deceived by what shines the most, the prettiest face, the best promise, the most exciting dream.”

— Robin Sacredfire

188. “I wanted to conquer the world and change it; and I did, by writing books.”

— Robin Sacredfire

189. “I was once asked what good others have done to me. They have been normal sometimes. For I do not see normal acts as extraordinary. Compassion, empathy and the will to see others succeed and be happy isn't extraordinary, but normal. And I am very sorry that, in a world full of immorality and selfishness, such things are still considered supreme.”

— Robin Sacredfire

190. “I would rather sleep next to crocodiles and lions than live a life as a slave. No life lived under the rules of another being is worth living.”

— Robin Sacredfire

191. “I wrote over three hundred books to escape the system, to buy my freedom, to escape slavery. Whoever thinks he needs a job, is a slave of the system he was born in. I would have written a thousand books or die writing if I had to, just to buy my freedom. I would have never surrendered to slavery. Whoever thinks I'm strange because I do not belong to the system and refuse to have a job, is my enemy.”

— Robin Sacredfire

192. “I'm always impressed when seeing how much admiration people show for writers that died centuries ago, and as much as I am shocked when they totally ignore me, right in front of them.”

— Robin Sacredfire

193. “I’m fundamentally a researcher, so I apply specific techniques to confirm my hypothesis, and that’s how I analyze spiritual principles under the light of science. That’s also what makes my books so powerful. They aren’t just philosophical works, but principles I investigate by observation until I can reach conclusions I can write about.”

— Robin Sacredfire

194. “I’m not a masochist but I do understand that most people are gone already, and life is now a war for souls.”

— Robin Sacredfire

195. “I’m not into writing many more books or more pages. My goal is to increase the value of each sentence I write. And for that, I have to erase my past and bring forward only what matches the new me, perspectives I can easily rewrite and adapt to my new vision.”

— Robin Sacredfire

196. “I’m often told that money and spirituality are different things by people who don’t have time to read spiritual books because they have to work for money.”

— Robin Sacredfire

197. “I’ve always been admired as a musician and painter but not as an author on spirituality. Human beings more easily admire art than words. And that’s why God is an artist, and not a priest.”

— Robin Sacredfire

198. “I’ve helped many friends, and even strangers, start successful businesses, by encouraging their ideas, reshaping their visions and giving them a clear image to hold on to. But in the end, they forgot me easily. I've noticed that they rather be near the ones who didn't support them. They prefer to forget me as fast as possible when success is acquired. And why? Because the ego is always stronger than the spirit. And the ego is ashamed to admit its defeat, to say 'thank you' and appreciate. The weak don't know that it is the spirit that calls them for success, and not the ego. With the ego, you go nowhere. And being very religious will never help with that; simply because God can't do much for those who are blind by their ego. And yes, I've also met many incompetent but highly religious individuals who fail in life with the grace of God, proving that the God of life, happiness and success, is not the God of the fools and most selfish. This duality confuses only the most egotistical. The plans of God are so very clear, that He could be dead and they would still work as I outlined here."

— Robin Sacredfire

199. "Identity is a sickness. When you can't break free from the attachments that identify you with a country, culture or family, or even your own name, you are forever trapped by dogma and the fear of what others think."

— Robin Sacredfire

200. "If a person cannot accept his own past, he can't fully acknowledge and make proper use of his present and he certainly cannot dream about or envision his future. When a person is unable to be responsible for his life in the present or appreciate it, and when he cannot plan his own future and act upon that plan, that person is considered, in varying degrees, to be useless."

201. “If a person does not care about how you feel, does not care about making you happy, about avoiding your anger and supporting you in your pains and frustrations, that person does not love you. It is simple. You see, love doesn’t exist without empathy and compassion. If a person is not worried about making you happy, apologizing for his or her mistakes, and trying to improve to make you proud, that person doesn’t love you. Any excuses, personal traumas or emotional issues can’t ever change this reality. And you must always make a decision accordingly, if you love yourself enough to care.”

— Robin Sacredfire

202. “If a psychologist could do mind-reading, he wouldn’t need the answers that he considers necessary.”

— Robin Sacredfire

203. “If a woman thinks that she has the right to sleep with whomever she chooses and without any emotional attachment, the only difference between her and a prostitute, is that the prostitute will not cry and suffer when a man refuses to see her again.”

— Robin Sacredfire

204. “If I don’t return to where I was, it’s because I don’t want to feel the same. It’s also because I’m forgiving whatever happened by moving on.”

— Robin Sacredfire

205. “If I had nothing that I love, surely, following a common life purpose, like sitting in an office waiting for a paycheck, would make sense. But I can write books, produce music, and create any business I want, and even succeed at anything I do. Therefore, to put my whole existence in the trashcan, to give up on my dreams, to be locked in an office or a classroom, just because of what other people think, would be literally the same as committing suicide.”

— Robin Sacredfire

206. “If insanity is in repeating the same behavior while expecting different results, no less insane is the one who repeats the same behavior without expecting different results because he can’t see that he is insane.”

— Robin Sacredfire

207. “If more people loved themselves, it would be easier to experience a loving world too. Instead, half is running away from their ego, while the other half is trying to impose it on others. One half rejects self-love while the other half seeks it through the love of others. I chose to be none of those halves, and in doing so, I found the path to enlightenment.”

— Robin Sacredfire

208. “If someone is as stupid as to ask me a question to which he desires no answer, he is also too stupid to ask questions. And that makes him, by default, too stupid to claim ownership of any knowledge or an understanding of knowledge itself. Unfortunately, however, that type of stupidity is often insulting. But maybe such person is just too stupid to notice the implications of stupidity.”

— Robin Sacredfire

209. “If someone tells you that you're too sensitive, grab his wallet, take all the money, and give it to a beggar. Then see how sensitive he is too.”

— Robin Sacredfire

210. “If there is no respect, trust, friendship, sharing, empathy and compassion, there is no love. Be aware of those who try to prove this quote wrong and avoid them, if it is truly your heart’s desire to find love.”

— Robin Sacredfire

211. “If we can visualize what we read, we own the potential to live that reality,”

— Robin Sacredfire

212. “If we have to experience the same thing in ten different ways, better choose the one we love the most.”

— Robin Sacredfire

213. “If you’re a hawk, you can’t explain to chickens how to fly, and you can’t give up on being a hawk just because the chickens can’t fly. Chickens get corn; Hawks hunt for their own food. Some people are born to be like chickens and sheep. Few are capable of flying and hunting. To live like a chicken in order to make chickens happy, when one can be flying and hunting, is not a smart thing for a hawk to do, but chickens can’t see that. Just because the world is designed as a cage, does not mean that living like a chicken is the right thing to do, especially when you can live like a hawk.”

— Robin Sacredfire

214. “If you are not writing something unique and new, you should not consider becoming a writer.”

— Robin Sacredfire

215. “If you can remember good moments, the bad won’t seem as bad anymore.”

— Robin Sacredfire

216. “If you can say ‘no’ to the things you don’t like, and if you can persist along the way of trying to become better, you will find better things, you always will. This is the law of life.”

— Robin Sacredfire

217. “If you can’t get what you want from life, see if you’re withholding something from someone else, because you won’t get what you want unless you start giving away what you have to those who need it. Selfishness is incompatible with abundance and visiting a temple or praying won’t help you escape this Divine law.”

— Robin Sacredfire

218. “If you have no faith, you have nothing. A person without faith is the poorest on Earth. People without faith are slaves to their own beliefs and are easily manipulated, hypnotized and controlled by others.”

— Robin Sacredfire

219. “If you keep thinking that I will always be late, then I will always be late for you.”

— Robin Sacredfire

220. “If you want a book for free, you don’t deserve the content of such book.”

— Robin Sacredfire

221. “If you want more friends, you must be willing to help people. There is only one way to help your friends and they know it: You have to become rich. If you are rich, you can invite them out to eat in the best restaurants, borrow them money without worries, offer expensive gifts, pay their hospital bills, help them start a business, support them if they're unemployed and invite them to spend luxurious vacations with you."

— Robin Sacredfire

222. "If you want to accurately judge the spiritual level of any human being, count the number of religions that he is capable of understanding and observe how effective he is in applying the lessons learned to his own life or the life of others."

— Robin Sacredfire

223. "If you want to go through life living like a Saint, get ready for the deepest suffering life can give anyone, for you will be betrayed by those you love the most, and you will be forced to say goodbye to those you helped the most. Your hopes and faith will be tested the whole time, until you die, either crushed by fate, or to reincarnate in heaven."

— Robin Sacredfire

224. "If you want to judge a person effectively, let that person judge herself first. If a woman calls other women sluts because they sleep with many men, but this woman does or did the same, she has perfectly labelled herself. If a businessman cheats on others, but says that cheaters deserve nothing, he has labeled himself perfectly well too. And the religious one, who complains of the lack of insight on others, but cannot confront another individual more open than him, has judged himself too above his words. And experience will show you that there is nothing to gain from people whom you have judged below their level of self-judgement. As a matter of fact, they will likely blame you for trying to take their self-judgement away in an attempt to make them righteous. It has come to my awareness that most people want to be punished for their ignorance, and will push away anyone trying to erase such life sentence from them."

— Robin Sacredfire

225. “If you want to understand the present, look at the past. If you want to know the future, look at the present. If you want to change everything, look at yourself.”

— Robin Sacredfire

226. “If you weren't a writer, you would believe me’, says the one who thinks that by nullifying my identity he can impose his ego.”

— Robin Sacredfire

227. “If you write for long enough, it comes a point in which you don't know if you write books or the books write you.”

— Robin Sacredfire

228. “If you're not hated by many, you're not good enough yet, because God hates and always hated the majority for good reasons.”

— Robin Sacredfire

229. “In a highly ignorant world, to have common sense, appears to be a form of enlightenment.”

— Robin Sacredfire

230. “In a hell full of demons, any demon is perceived by other demons as normal. And if these demons don't consider themselves demonic, and don't know that their normal is actually evil, any angel will be perceived by them as a threat that must be attacked, destroyed, annihilated, especially, if such angel does not identify himself with his environment and isolates himself. It is a predisposition of the wicked to attack what they can't understand, for that is the reason why they are spiritually blind, ignorant and unconscious to the truth. The ones who perceive darkness as their home will always attack the light and see it as a threat.”

— Robin Sacredfire

231. “In every single poor country that I visited, I saw poor values and resentful attitudes. But in the rich, I saw delusional arrogance.”

— Robin Sacredfire

232. “In order to defeat your enemy, you must not see your opponent as an enemy. Imagine what it would be like to be him, embrace and admire that state of being, and then you will know what he fears the most. For you would have feared the same if you were him. It is a law of this universe that one cannot defeat that which can't defeat him as well and, in this sense, there are no enemies, winners or losers, but only different perspectives in what regards the same experience. That is why, sometimes one also wins when losing.”

— Robin Sacredfire

233. “In our dreams, we find the dreams of others, and in other's dreams we find ourselves. No will is separated from others and no dream is in itself isolated from the will of God.”

— Robin Sacredfire

234. “In our relative existence, it is not we who are at the origin of the movement of things and events. The Force that impels us to orient ourselves towards our essential being comes precisely from this same essential being.”

— Robin Sacredfire

235. “In some countries that I have visited, I saw that citizens are very rude and animalistic. They have no moral, no values, and no manners.

They are always staring at others, judging with their eyes of ignorance and their very small consciousness, they are impolite wherever you go, and their customer service is horrible. They never say sorry for anything and even offend you when you complain about their mistakes and lack of manners. Besides, eating in some of these nations often reveals to be a huge disaster; food is usually rotten, and may come with either hair, stones or even glass, as I have found. They waste money as I have never seen anywhere else and are simultaneously very abusive in prices. Their prices are high but their level of quality is not even suitable for animals. They represent a waste of foreign investments. Their youngest generation is also a disaster, extremely ignorant, without any respect or education, undeserving of any job or even trust. Nobody in his right mind should ever employ them, marry them or befriend them. Most are always trying to use their friendships to take advantage of others, especially if such people are outsiders. Their women are gold diggers and extremely promiscuous, especially towards men of other cultures, as if their pride was built on the number of sex partners they can have from the widest variety of nations from around the globe, especially if such men are wealthy; and yet, they can also show a high predisposition for racist behaviors and ignorance in what regards the planet they live in. They are, foremost, selfish, sadistic and parasitic. These countries and their people represent the lowest level of mankind. Whenever you witness what I just described, you are experiencing a country reaching its end. Move out of it while you can, for God will set on such people Divine justice as quickly as such citizens, by their immoral behavior, approach it. Many of such countries end with the loss of their sovereignty for political reasons, invasions by foreign armies, civil wars, violent revolutions, major economical collapses leading the citizens to poverty and starvation, and much more.”

— Robin Sacredfire

236. "In the end, the good students who accepted all the lies without ever rejecting them, rule society and manage corporations, where all the others that couldn't accept them, are ruled."

— Robin Sacredfire

237. "In the land of contrasts, the man who sees the similarities is king of his soul. In the land of similarities, the woman who recognizes the differences awaits her king to be crowned queen of his heart."

— Robin Sacredfire

238. "In times of war, as in life, surround yourself with people of value, virtue and high morals, because it is always better to lose, perish and vanish in glory than to live in shame."

— Robin Sacredfire

239. "Injustice often blinds us to the fact that many injustices need to be carried out for justice to be balanced again."

— Robin Sacredfire

240. "Inspiration is the tool God uses to communicate with humans. If God didn't exist, there would be no creativity or inventions in the world."

— Robin Sacredfire

241. "Instead of saying "men" or "friends" or "country", you should notice "who", "who are they" and "where". As you develop this skill, you will be able to redirect your decisions beyond the illusion of appearances. And then you reach your destination much faster."

— Robin Sacredfire

242. “Isn’t it interesting that emotionally abusive personalities always expect their victim to feel guilty for them so that they can feel sorry for themselves? They live in a constant torture by the demons of fear and regret, and the less they assume responsibility for their own behavior and words, the greater the legion that eventually possesses their soul and leads them to hell before they reach it. A normal communication is a luxury for such individuals, for their spirit is now a hostage to the torture of ignorance, the separation between their brain and their soul. The only thing they can do is manipulate and provoke, because they’re being distracted by their new hosts towards pushing away the ones who could take them out of the water where they have chosen to drown themselves when giving up on trust, empathy, compassion and love. No one can save them because they have not clearly stated that they wish to be saved. And each human is responsible for his own fate.”

— Robin Sacredfire

243. “Isn’t it interesting that most people don’t like to share what they know or have? Imagine a world where doctors, teachers and scientists did the same to you.”

— Robin Sacredfire

244. “It amazes me, every single time, to see so much certainty backed by so much ignorance and neglect on what is being believed and shared. The mass wisdom of the fools can only be compared to the egotistical need of schizophrenics with many imaginary friends.”

— Robin Sacredfire

245. “It is a great gift of karma to be reborn as a human being. However, most souls disregard the immense value they obtain when having a human body, by not living fully to their potential. The fear of the future, rather than enthusiasm and joy towards the unknown; the fear of change, rather than the intention of changing towards arbitrary purposes; the fear of liberty, rather than uncompromising oneself towards an imprisoning system; the fear of loving and trusting, rather than experiencing compassion and empathy; the fear of moving beyond our comfort zone, rather than experiencing life beyond a solid perspective as the one shown by a tree; the fear of losing reputation, rather than abandoning the ego to embrace more; all those things are not natural to a human body and do not belong on the set of purposes that comprehend the reason for a human existence.”

— Robin Sacredfire

246. “It is always better to pray to an invisible God you don't understand and spend the rest of your life asking questions without an answer than to be distracted with foolishness.”

— Robin Sacredfire

247. “It is astonishing for me to notice that the most suffering nations have butchers carefully hidden under the most superlative titles - psychologists, priests, psychiatrists and physicians.”

— Robin Sacredfire

248. “It is because of our self-image that we tend to forget answers that may jeopardize our future at crucial moments, or to communicate words that offend who we love the most when we believe we don't deserve the love of another person.”

— Robin Sacredfire

249. “It is easier to pull another person down by maintaining the same personality traits than to change. When someone promises change, what that person is really promising you, is that she'll change you enough to the point in which you notice no difference between both.

Once you react to the psychological violence in the same way, she can then say you are now both equal.”

— Robin Sacredfire

250. “It is interesting to observe that the more I insult someone with the word stupid and the more one judges me as arrogant, the more that same individual refuses to know what I know, read what I write, therefore entrapping himself in ignorance and egotism for many more years of his life, proving that people are only victims of their decisions, not their circumstances.”

— Robin Sacredfire

251. “It is more spiritual the one who faces darkness with his light than the one who hides his light from the world.”

— Robin Sacredfire

252. “It is not wrong to change in order to achieve certain goals in life. If you want a happy relationship, for example, you can't expect luck to create it. You can't have something that implies you without being yourself there.”

— Robin Sacredfire

253. “It is one of life's greatest mysteries, when the dumb unite to do something good against their will.”

— Robin Sacredfire

254. “It is possible to access secrets of mind reprogramming with effortless methods. However, they are very dangerous to apply, and often, the consequences and implications, unpredictable as well. This universe has its own rules, and they should never be broken. There is a very big price to pay when that happens, and many times, if not with loneliness and severe levels of depression, with death itself. That is why, the vast majority of those who know this, focus on conscious methods. They are safer, imply more responsibility, and are easier to explain and understand. The secret path is secret for a very good reason; it is not meant for the common mortal. The common human, needs to go through rituals of preparation before he is ready to accept such secrets, and it can take years. It often takes a whole lifetime for the common person. The conscious method is a safe path to the unconscious. Knowledge is a good and well-rooted path. But it's also true that some books are made to access the subconscious mind more than others. Meditation, on the other hand, can reveal you how ready you are to acquire what you want, and what you need to do next, if that is not the case. Nothing can enter your heart before your mind is ready. Finally, it is in the heart that you find all the answers you seek, including the ones that nullify the relevance of any of your questions.”

— Robin Sacredfire

255. “It is quite hard when we do things that we couldn't forgive before in others, but that's how we forgive others and ourselves at the same time. Life pushes us towards those situations.”

— Robin Sacredfire

256. “It is really interesting to notice that the people who suffer the most with mental disorders are also the ones who resist receiving therapy and the ones who criticize, ridicule and oppose therapy the most.”

— Robin Sacredfire

257. “It is the cruelty of men that we must fear, not the wisdom they misuse, and certainly not the wise who possess it.”

— Robin Sacredfire

258. “It is the deep positive emotional experience that allows enlightenment – the true wisdom.”

— Robin Sacredfire

259. “It is very easy to be spiritual inside a religious group but true faith is practiced when you love the ignorant and the atheists, despite their ridicule and offenses, and without the need to convert them to your beliefs.”

— Robin Sacredfire

260. “It is very impressive to notice that whatsoever you make a person believe about you, that person will rush to represent within his role, as if he was mentally programmed to play the drama being offered. People are so trapped within their mind, that they end up always acting inside a theatre, in which their part has been foreseen long before they entered the roles they represent. Likewise, they become easily predictable, programmable, influenceable, manipulated, played like a string puppet. And these puppets become funnier, when mentioning mental programming, fearing mental programming and attacking mental programming, while not realizing that they are victims of it, using the words, and gestures, and even phrases, that they were programmed to use, by those who programmed them. The one with a poor consciousness is always a poor actor within his own life. He perfectly represents it, without any awareness. If he had any, he would probably not do it. But what else could he do? As prisoners in a cell with an open door, such poor souls ask when presented with freedom: ‘What shall I do if all I know is this?’ And so, they remain inside of it, waiting for someone to tell them an answer they cannot ever understand before they see it for themselves.”

261. "It is very painful to argue with an incredibly ignorant person. Not because they are stupid, but because the stupid are unbelievably arrogant and insulting. Their constant intention to manipulate a conversation in order to nullify their responsibility transforms any conversation into a game of theirs to bring another person down rather than using logic, and much less allow an agreement."

— Robin Sacredfire

262. "It may sound like a bold statement for one to claim that he is the world's best at something but it's not an impossibility. I've done it many times, and so did several Olympic athletes. It requires more boldness to distrust what I just said, as in those who won't read my books and access the reasons to why they're bestsellers."

— Robin Sacredfire

263. "It should be obvious but I've never met anyone that is able to perceive incompetent managers and lack of corporate integrity as the main causes for incompetent workers and poor results in productivity. And by the way, the exact same principles apply to Universities, but I've also never met students capable of questioning their teachers as they should, or teachers that aren't afraid to be questioned regarding their own integrity. It's really easy to talk nonsense in a classroom using social status, certificates and books as a backbone for credibility, but hard to face accountability for the words one vomits out of his brain without ever trying to digest them with a stomach for confrontation with realism. If anything useful I learned in college, as both a student and lecturer, is that my teachers and coworkers were often a bunch of arrogant useful idiots feeding on the illusion that their reputation makes them who they are. Their self-delusion makes them pathetic. And the only thing such individuals ever produced were pathetic students."

— Robin Sacredfire

264. "It's a big world for the idiots. If you're a writer, there are not many cities where you can go and feel normal."

— Robin Sacredfire

265. "It's as valid to repeat to ourselves what we need to believe, as it is to believe in the things others repeatedly told us but affect us negatively. It sounds crazy, but not as crazy as believing in the things that others said and damage us."

— Robin Sacredfire

266. "It's funny when so many people I meet tell me that I'm a complicated and mysterious person they can't understand. The problem isn't in me but in them. When I say something, I do it. The problem is that they don't believe I will, and they don't believe anyone can do what I say I will. That's their confusion. But actually, I'm a simple person, as I always match my own words. That's how you must see it. Just cut through common sense and move forward, and achieve. Let others worry about the how."

— Robin Sacredfire

267. "It's hypocritical to expect a job based on a curriculum built out of companies that for whatever reason you rejected or rejected you."

— Robin Sacredfire

268. "It's ok when people don't like you. Who said pigs have to fly with birds?"

— Robin Sacredfire

— Robin Sacredfire

270. “It’s very interesting to see that the more money I make from my own businesses, the more people try to convince me that I should get a normal job, one in which I earn far less than what I can earn now while not working.”

271. “It’s when you see yourself as different rather than better, that you truly become a change that interferes with the world rather than allowing that world, in its different dynamics and forms of expression, to be interfering with you.”

273. “Karma is not what you have but what you accept and expect to have. When I was a teenager, I was a bad student. The ones who, as me, received bad grades, used to say ‘oh well, just the same as always, looks like I am really stupid, but my dad can find me a job in a restaurant serving at the table by the end of this year, and then I don’t have to return here anymore.’ I used to say, ‘something is very wrong with the system, because this shouldn’t happen.’ Later in life, when I was unhappy with my job, others used to tell me, ‘I don’t like my job either, but I deserve it.’ I used to say, ‘Oh well, I guess I need to start learning how to create my own business.’ Then, I saw the economical situation getting worse for most people around me. Most of them would say ‘I need to start saving as much as I can.’ I started thinking ‘I need to become a magician and multiply my income in non-physical ways.’ That’s when I realized: I actually have no karma because it can’t catch me.”

274. “Keeping yourself silent when you witness injustice is to act against your own spirituality, because nothing is separated from your inner world.”

275. “Know thyself and you’ll know the world, but master thyself and you’ll master the world you live in.”

— Robin Sacredfire

276. “Know that your soul can do whatever you want it to do, because you’re not your body.”

— Robin Sacredfire

277. “Knowing when to quit is just as important as knowing when not to quit. You see, if I offer three hundred books to one person and this person does not read even one, if I give her knowledge and she refuses to apply, if I propose therapy but she refuses to accept it, then, after dozens of forgivenesses and failed promises, it is time to quit and let her go from my life.”

281. “Learn fast

because forever

you won't last.

Appreciate entirely because opportunities

can disappear permanently.

Love completely because,

when love is gone,

you'll regret immensely.

Give your soul to a purpose

283. “Life is a mystery unveiled with the awareness of truth.”

— Robin Sacredfire

284. “Life is all about perspective. That's why you need to always read more. You need to go beyond the majority; because what you want always matches who you want to become, not who you are at any given present moment. A wider perspective encompasses more, and at the end of the journey, you'll find yourself closer to God than to your fellow humans, although more capable of accepting them. The path towards patience, acceptance and enlightenment, is always a one way road in the expansion of consciousness. For every new country you encounter, the previous becomes, by comparison, easier to comprehend; for every reincarnation you face, the previous existence makes more sense; for every new planet you travel to, the previous, albeit decadent and immoral, becomes more comprehensive. We are never meant to accept, but to develop in understanding, and along the process, become better tomorrow than yesterday.”

— Robin Sacredfire

285. “Life is indeed perfect in itself. You see, the best religions of the world have members so afraid to lose them, that they themselves will fear any change and, in doing so, stop such religion from progressing and, in such attitude, lead it to an inevitable destruction. The art of detachment can be ignored for as long as one can attach, but the level at which one attaches to things will bring forth an equally leveled suffering; and so, the higher the emotional attachment, the higher the amount of pain one feels at the end. The atheists, on the other hand, are, ironically, the individuals most commonly possessed by spirits, and often, due to their lower vibration, demons. Their lack of spirituality is both a disease and a justification for such mental disease. Whatever they say, serves them well, but makes them suffer at the same time. And evil, can only be ignored insofar as people have options that allow ignoring it. As soon as those options vanish or are all under the control of evil, revolutions become inevitable. And so, one can say that truth doesn't need faith to exist but is surely more easily recognized under the right beliefs, and as much as spirituality doesn't need religion, but is more easily found inside one."

— Robin Sacredfire

286. "Life is supposed to be fast, not slow. Spirits fly when worms are crawling; birds sing when the dying ones are moaning."

— Robin Sacredfire

287. "Life, with all its surprises, is full of moments that, although predictable, keep surprising us. Every sensation, although already written, makes us feel each moment uniquely; and yet, we think about the future and the past, while insisting in forgetting the present. All memories and imaginations replace love with the feeling of sadness, a sadness built upon repetitions that match the undesired future and past. To lose is always harder than to forget, but to feel what can't be changed is harder than losing it. It is hard to know without the capacity for creating, to see without the potential to predict, and to pay for what we know and see without any positive outcome at sight. But that is the life of many, a life that, in their despair, is called real, as real as their self-destruction within it; for such is the consequence of venerating ignorance while in hunger for reason. Many so live in evil, destroying the good that comes to them, emptying their soul in the process, and alchemically merging with the physical world, while disappearing in it; for such is life claiming their soul before claiming their body. Evil consumes the soul just as Earth consumes the body. To do evil is to commit suicide before death presents itself; and the endless nightmares of such creatures are merely manifestations of the bridge they've been building for themselves, between their illusions inside the material world and their fate within the spiritual world; for such is the state of slavery of the ignorant, dead in spirit and active in body but without any achievements in life; and yet, if the end of the illusion came, the root of all truth would merely expand itself furthermore, for one cannot come to himself before being with everything else; one cannot live without first experiencing the death of himself. All that comes from the spirit has once occupied the place of many egos, just as the state of being comes from the activity of manifesting consciousness in many things, many lives, many perspectives; because one is all, but all cannot come into one, not until each one of that all is present in its fullness as one. And so, we could very well say that the expansion of one is the direction towards the truth, while the retrocession in being one is the direction towards the lie. And since all lies exist within the truth, we can also say that self-destruction, or evilness, is nothing more than the process of delaying the inevitability of life, to expand into thousands of years what could be achieved in one second. But wouldn't that be expectable from one that fears life while wanting to experience it to its fullness? Such person is merely reducing the level in which he can live, even when, but mainly while, reducing himself in front of his own existence, including when diminishing himself before life. And that's why the end of all things will always reveal the beginning of them, for such end is merely a delaying of what already was and should keep on being. It is the need to delay being that expands the being beyond himself, only and merely to simply bring him back to himself at the end. That is all for now, and the now in that all; for life is no more than an eternal present, redistributing its colors to create a big picture, one in which the vision shows the first spot in which all began. And that is enlightenment, as much as it is forgiveness, as much as it is sadness and joy, regret and responsibility, love and hate, emotions and emotionless, action and non-action, the one and the nothingness manifesting themselves at the exact same time and in the same place, allowing us the illusion of time and distance, when, deeply within, we know they're not real. But what is real? That is the journey of life; for one cannot say that there are different perspectives, but merely different states of consciousness. In a perfect world, there is but one state of awareness.”

288. “Let the religious hypocrites and the arrogant fools who have surrounded you for too long show themselves through what you allow them to see; for God washes away the dirt from you when you are in darkness so that you may shine in all your glory when you rise again in victory. Let patience be your cane and time be your ally.”

— Robin Sacredfire

289. “Life does not offer gifts or rewards, but opportunities. Nobody is entitled to anything. Only behavior and labor defines us and what we have. Whenever you make a choice, you follow one path and move apart from another. If your job occupies more importance in your mind, time and actions, than your dream, then you will not accomplish your dream but maybe receive a raise in your salary instead and be happy with that loss. If you look at relationships as a toy store, if you look at your companion as easily replaceable, then you will very likely lose the one you have. If you rather enjoy life with your friends than with your companion, you will end up alone. If you insult the wise, you then end up surrounded by fools. If you neglect your wealth, you will likely end up poor. If you destroy love, you will end up feeling unloved. If you destroy the good that comes to you, you will end up experiencing evil. Life will always reflect your actions, words and thoughts. You are what you spend most of your time doing, saying and thinking. Your life is always a reflection of your priorities. If you spend your time partying, insulting and occupying your mind with nonsense from social media, music with degrading lyrics, and movies that promote antisocial values, you get zero from life.”

292. “Love is the desire in trusting someone and trusting the desire in that same one.”

— Robin Sacredfire

293. “Love is the foundation, the mechanism and the conductor of life.”

— Robin Sacredfire

294. “Many of my books emerged from deep conversations with fools. I merely had to erase their deep ignorant sayings, which nonetheless forced me to reconstruct a new insight. Because, you see, a rotten apple can feed a growing apple-tree but never replace it or do more than that once its task is done. Likewise, most human beings only exist to feed you with their rotting ignorance. They have nothing else inside themselves. And that's exactly how you should see them, because that's how they see themselves as well. This is the reason why they always try to associate your merit with their lack of it.”

— Robin Sacredfire

295. “Many of the people who envy my lifestyle and my skills, tell me that the way I think isn't suitable for this world, that I'm too judgmental, demanding and critical of others. They assume that the two things, my success and my thinking, come in different packages.”

— Robin Sacredfire

296. “Many people have told me that I have high requirements with the ones I choose for my life. I disagree. If you defecate on the plate of a hungry person, you can't say he doesn't eat because he is unthankful and has no gratitude towards life. I do like mankind, but I can't see mankind in the souls of the many I encounter. And I will not ever accept such decadence just because many have done it.”

— Robin Sacredfire

297. Many people trust the imbecile, and that's how the sheep are led to the slaughterhouse.”

— Robin Sacredfire

298. “Many people will enter your life. Each one has a role in your psyche. Each one represents a part of you. Some people represent hope; others represent failure. If most of whom you are is self-destructive, you will attract failure most of the times, and neglect the very few opportunities you get along the way.”

— Robin Sacredfire

299. “Many popular stories and ideas led society to believe that heroes can save the world and fight armies. That is absurd. The only way anyone will ever save the world is if such person can build an army, an army supported by one idea, a group supported by a value, a family strengthened by commitment.”

306. “Most christians aren't aware that God hates them. God hates the arrogant and the imbecile that reject knowledge and instruction, and assume themselves superior to other human beings. And sadly, most christians fit into a paradigm that paradoxically simultaneously rejects them.”

— Robin Sacredfire

307. “Most humans are so incredibly arrogant, that they can't conceive the idea that they are far more insignificant than they would ever imagine. That truth would devastate anyone at present time.”

— Robin Sacredfire

308. “Most of the times I feel like I'm talking to walls. Most people are a total waste of time. They are so obsessed with their own ego and their absurd ideas about the world, that exist only inside their brain, that talking to them becomes a very stressful activity.”

— Robin Sacredfire

309. “Most people are asleep and need to be confronted, like adults that are still behaving like they're five years old, and don't want to assume responsibility for their mistakes.”

— Robin Sacredfire

310. “Most people are like onions. At the surface, they may seem pretty, blond, with blue eyes, possess a beautiful face and exhibit an elegant body; then, the second layer reveals a bad attitude, health disorders, behavior issues, a tend to mood swings; and by the time you reach the final layer, you can feel disgusted with what you find, especially, if you realize that a beautiful woman is possessed and filled with filth inside, filth in the form of addictions, to drugs, to sex, to sadism, hate and destruction. And yet, you peel every single layer with tears in your eyes. Even when they're punished with a sudden death, you cry."

— Robin Sacredfire

311. "Most people are more willing to enter an airplane than jump on a trampoline. And they're more terrified from bungee jumping, than spending hours at hundreds of meters above the ground."

— Robin Sacredfire

312. "Most people are so obsessed with themselves and their worth, that they only understand the value of another human being when they lose him or her forever."

— Robin Sacredfire

313. "Most people believe that sharing the same flesh and blood, the same basic DNA structure, makes them your family. How sad that is. Because, you see, as a spiritual person, I believe you must deserve a family, not just own it. If those who are my biologic family, don't behave as such, they are not my family. If I have chosen them before I was born, I have been betrayed. I owe them nothing, in this or the many lives to come. In fact, if they betray me in this life, they will return as my enemies in the next; and their karma will make me victorious in that future confrontation."

— Robin Sacredfire

314. "Most people from around the world can't tell if I'm European, Asian, Arab, African, North American or South American. Isn't it good to know my ancestors weren't racist?"

— Robin Sacredfire

315. “Most people can’t obtain wealth because they tend to follow a mental program telling them that they should always put energy in getting money with actions and attention on known paths to acquire wealth.”

— Robin Sacredfire

316. “Most people can’t see, even if you tell them, that money doesn’t exist. Money is literally speaking an IOU – I owe you. Therefore, we’re all exchanging beliefs between one another.”

— Robin Sacredfire

317. “Most people need, at least, a very strong ethical training. They tend to lack basic moral. And it's a waste of time to teach very important universal rules to someone who doesn't understand the meaning of helping others or feeling empathy for them.”

— Robin Sacredfire

318. “Most people put too much emphasis and value on their own family, but when a family is promoting anti-survival ideals, it is actually healthier to hate it. Anyone depending too much on the opinions of others, parents or not, whenever such individuals are deeply insane or ignorant, or both, is absorbing the wrong mindset and creating the foundation of what we know as failure. It is only when you make the wrong rules yours, and never before that, that failure becomes a personal thing. The replication of false paradigms replicates similar experiences in personal finance and relationships, but also in other areas of life.”

— Robin Sacredfire

319. “Most people resist what they’re not familiar with, even when, and despite, producing better and faster results. And that resumes their outcome in any area of life. The most fearful fail the most because Earth was meant for the bravest and more courageous amongst us.”

— Robin Sacredfire

320. “Most people seem to get bored easily when having an easy life, and need to feed on drama and conflicts to feel alive. They are like vampires and zombies, who feed on the anger of others. The flesh and blood is replaced here by life energy. Now, the main point to be made, is that toxic women and toxic men do make us sick, and life goes nowhere around such decadent souls. Alone, we have choices. With a mentally sick person in our life, you can’t make plans for the future. It is impossible to make long-term plans when teaming with people who are too obsessed with conflicts and selfish needs. And hopefully, there will come a time when such individuals are segregated from society and put in mental hospitals. Until that moment comes, we can only avoid them and label them toxic personalities.”

— Robin Sacredfire

321. “Most people seem to have this illusion that they are lost in life. Nobody is ever lost. People are merely in the dark, blinded by their ego. As soon as they learn how to enlighten themselves, the whole truth is revealed to them.”

— Robin Sacredfire

322. “Most people spend their entire life worrying about how to die. You know, the questions are always about retirement, medical insurance, housing...; it is all about how to die easily and comfortably.”

— Robin Sacredfire

323. “Most people think that anger, sadness and frustration are to be avoided. How am I to improve myself if I can be happy in being stupid, happy in being with the stupid and contempt with too little? How am I to improve if my desire is not fueled by need? And how am I to know need if I cannot feel dissatisfaction, sadness and frustration?

— Robin Sacredfire

324. “Most people think that making a living from books is fun and joyful, but there's much more to it than what the eyes can see, and I wish I had more time for more profitable and also joyful activities.”

— Robin Sacredfire

325. “Most people think that money and love aren't related topics, but allow me explain this to you in a realistic way: When someone criticizes you and doesn't see your value, this person is trying to bargain your happiness; When someone doesn't invest in a relationship, but instead complains about her needs and wants, this person is overpricing herself; When a woman invests more in her outer beauty than inner beauty, she is focusing on her brand, and not quality; When the cost of a relationship exceeds the quality of what you get, you are being cheated; And there's really no such thing as cost for quality, because very often the nicest people you find are also the easiest to hang out with, and the kindest. They make you feel as if your life is easy, and despite any challenges along the way, and also that you haven't lost anything but instead gained a lot. When someone adds value to your life, well then, that person proves to be a great investment; and great investments are worth a lifetime. They require little to be maintained but give you plenty in return. You should never let go of a good opportunity, in love and wealth. If you're smart enough to understand this, you can be in a fantastic relationship and wealthy at the same time. If you can't, you probably undervalued yourself.”

— Robin Sacredfire

326. “Most people try to keep what they’re losing or become depressed about what they can’t maintain, but the right attitude is to accept change and have faith in a bright new future, because you must be aware of the opportunities that any calamity brings.”

— Robin Sacredfire

327. “Most religious persons would say that ‘truth is God,’ but they can’t explain clearly who is God and hold a perspective of truth that is actually a religious dogma.”

— Robin Sacredfire

328. “Most spiritual people are so obsessed with their own ideas about what spirituality is supposed to be that they completely ignore and neglect the words of the most well-sold spiritual authors in the world, including me, just because we don’t match what they think we should be.”

— Robin Sacredfire

329. “Moving apart from someone means learning to readjust our own chemical nature.”

330. “My awakening was difficult and long but I did not have to make it on my own. Everyone I met forced me to awake. My parents said I was completely abnormal, not human or normal at all, not like any other child they had ever seen. Then, psychologists told me I have a very high capacity to analyze others and make proper deductions, which is very uncommon in human beings. The philosophers I met, were astonished with my innate capacity to see things they couldn’t, among texts they supposedly should know better than me. And finally, in religious groups, I was able to scare the ones in the highest ranks among them, by showing an ability to see that they had to develop through decades of hard work. None of them told me I was an alien but every single person I met had alienated me against my will. At the end of this journey, the awakening was too clear to be rejected. And once I accepted it, everything else was added to me, including my forgotten memories of other planets.”

— Robin Sacredfire

331. “My decision isn't as important as the freedom to decide, and my income isn't as important as what I do to earn it.”

— Robin Sacredfire

332. “My evolution as a writer? My mother said: ‘Stop talking like that’; Teachers said: ‘You're weird’; Many readers said: ‘Useless’; Very few readers said: ‘Best books ever, changed my whole life, making me richer, happier and healthier’. Among them, some solved their relationship issues, others found the truth they couldn't get from many religions they encountered, and some even cured long term illnesses. And those very few readers, made climbing this huge mountain for more than thirty years, completely worth the effort.

— Robin Sacredfire

333. “My life, my goals and my values and rules are non-negotiable. I don't like to even argue them with anyone. If someone pushes me to change them, that person asks for a fight. And likewise, nobody should expect me to change into someone I'm not and appreciate people I despise. I did not go through hell all my life to live like a trashcan at the end of the road, as the ones who differentiate themselves from me by prioritizing ideas, things and beliefs I despise. Ignorance is insulting to me and the ones who take pride on their ignorance make themselves my enemies.”

— Robin Sacredfire

334. “Narcissists: Hurt their ego by telling them that they should develop empathy for another human being, tell them that the heart is more important than appearances, and they will never talk to you ever again.”

— Robin Sacredfire

335. “Neurotics are often offended by the truth or possess a horrible phobia for arguments they can't fight against, and truly believe that, in a perfect society, everyone should have their words filtered by a higher authority before expressing a viewpoint, while assuming that freedom of speech is the freedom to talk or write what others expect to hear or read. They also think that, as long as they start each sentence with generalizations like ‘everybody’, ‘everyone’, ‘people’, ‘many’, ‘all’, ‘always’ and ‘normal’, nobody will notice how deeply unreasonable, illogical, unjustifiable and insane they truly are.”

— Robin Sacredfire

336. “Nobody fights over the opinion of which book is better. So why do we fight over which religion is better, if they're all based on books? Let us read and learn from them all and unite in our differences and disagreements too.”

— Robin Sacredfire

337. “Nobody on this planet who is sane wants second handed underwear or second handed sex toys. So why are so many people very open to sex with strangers and to allowing their body to become much more than just second handed? I simply cannot consider them mentally sane for the exact same reasons.”

— Robin Sacredfire

338. “Nothing and nobody in the entire world can stop the one who is not afraid of failure.”

— Robin Sacredfire

339. “Nothing can create more dramatic changes than simple and pure love and compassion.”

— Robin Sacredfire

340. “One does not achieve greatness because he has no anger in him, but because he has learned how to master it.”

— Robin Sacredfire

341. “Once I stopped fighting back and started seeing my enemies as useful idiots, and my personal barriers in life as useful schools of development, within which I could find a hidden door, I was catapulted to the unknown; and upon arriving at my unpredictable destination, I realized that I had landed exactly in the dream I had formed from the start.

— Robin Sacredfire

342. “Often seems to me that people believe they can become only what they already are, when in fact they are what they've chosen to be, with a deliberate decision as well as the lack of it.”

— Robin Sacredfire

343. “One can only have the illusion of honesty when not knowing his own identity. In this sense, morality is an illusion. It manifests only on those who have trespassed such illusion.”

— Robin Sacredfire

344. “One doesn't write because he wants but because he must.”

— Robin Sacredfire

345. “One of the biggest surprises my students always had in their exams, which made some angry and others, few, very happy, was to realize I always allow multiple correct answers, and also saw as correct many answers I didn't predict to receive. The reason I did this, is because life works in the same way. If I did as other teachers, and only allowed one correct answer, then students would never really have a chance at understanding how life works. Because it's never about the answer; it's all about the intention in the answer; and that intention puts the teacher in a completely different role, with which most aren't comfortable. That's why I was never surprised to hear from students, including in their final year of college, that they had never met any other teacher like me in their entire life. They also knew that they very likely never will. But very few among those students are brave enough to look at the portals to higher dimensions of conscience that open before their eyes, either they're confronting them from one perspective or another. And I wonder if any of these students will one day present the same opportunities they got from me to others. These portals represent amazing options for the ones with the courage to see them and cross them. But only a very powerful person possesses the power to open one for others. And if you think that person is what it seems, you will neglect the magician hiding behind the illusion of the teacher in front of you. You see, I was never teaching; I was always creating magic in the classroom. The ones looking for the teaching, got confused, the ones looking at the lecturer were hypnotized by the illusion, and those who really saw what was happening, were uplifted. Among thousands of them, one or two have acquired the skills to become magicians themselves. They are now performing the same kind of magic they learned from me wherever they go, and living the life they always dreamed to have.”

— Robin Sacredfire

347. “One of the most obvious characteristics of the fools is that they need to ask the same question multiple times whenever the answer doesn’t match their preconceived judgement. They think that it’s easier to impose their lie than accepting the truth.”

348. “One of the things I really dislike about christians is their hypocrisy; they criticize magicians and occultists but portray Jesus as both.”

— Robin Sacredfire

349. “One percent of people are trustworthy and honest, one percent are persistent in life, one percent understands love and compassion, one percent succeeds in life, and on and on; whenever you look at the material side of life, as the one percent who are rich and succeeding in business, you are looking at the same paradigm.”

— Robin Sacredfire

350. “One the greatest spiritual secrets is that you can’t become someone different without changing your previous state of being. The two remain different, although in the process of changing, you can’t see the difference in yourself. You would essentially be acting in accordance with your most recent state of consciousness. The other greatest secret is that imagination bridges any transformation, meaning that you can always become what you’ve accepted first as a possibility. The transition between the two states of being would be the equivalent to a transition between parallel realities. And yet, because you are a spirit, this transition won’t be physical, won’t be seen and can’t be proven with our five senses. Only the theories in mathematics and physics can prove what I just said; only your awareness can allow you such recognition.”

— Robin Sacredfire

351. “Only the person who is not focused on building his future, and does not believe with all his heart in that possibility, suffers. There isn’t a single problem capable of stopping a dreamer from drinking joy from the dreams he builds for himself.”

— Robin Sacredfire

352. “Order drives one inward, and disorder outward, and between both, consciousness has a chance to rediscover itself.”

— Robin Sacredfire

353. “Our desires, dreams and hopes, open portals. These portals manifest in our level of consciousness and five senses, in the form of decisions related to the material world but also opportunities. Now, at the exact same time, or maybe even slightly before in time, we get the exact opposite, the temptation, the illusion and deception. And when we are about to make a decision, as if by magic, the two things come stronger towards us, as if pushing us into a duality that makes it hard to decide. Now, this brings me to another super interesting fact: Most people assume that they have free will, and that choices are hard to be made, and that life is full of dualities, and so on. And I have learned that this is just a great deception related to our planet, which, as human beings, we must transcend.”

— Robin Sacredfire

354. “Our goals must be things we can measure every day, like a graphic that a company would use to control its profits.”

— Robin Sacredfire

355. “Our most fundamental spiritual experiences consist on experiences of risk, fear and chances that make us jump from a cliff of emotional turmoil and into a chaos of excitement. It's precisely the potential for disappointment, pain and total annihilation that makes them so spiritual."

— Robin Sacredfire

356. "Our world is ruled by money. Without it, you can't even buy your own freedom. If you need to work for money, then you are a slave of money."

— Robin Sacredfire

357. "Pain is a temporary illusion. I've concluded this through the many people who made fun of me when I said I was going to write my first book, and ten years later are asking me how to get rich; the former girlfriends who pushed me away and a year later started chasing me back; and the family members who apologize now for things that occurred twenty years ago. I can only assume that everyone else that hasn't regretted yet being mean will reincarnate in a condition that will force them furthermore into that feeling of guilt, even if it takes them an entire lifetime of suffering to reach such state of awareness."

— Robin Sacredfire

358. "Pain is what we get, when we are consumed by the fire of anger. We need to balance that with love. Meditation is the way; Meditation is how you practice accepting yourself. You don't have to focus on anything or force yourself in uncomfortable positions. Simply go to a garden during sunrise, sit on a bench and listen to the birds. This is meditation. You see, we shower to be clean, we go to the gym to exercise the body, we eat to have energy, and we meditate to put our thoughts in order with our soul. Meditation is not a way to escape reality but a practice that teaches you how to accept it. You need more reality in your life but you need it with an open heart. Most of the world is in the dark, and if you open a weak heart to it, you get hurt. You can learn to see the world as it is, but you have to know reality with your own consciousness. Then, you can attract anything you want, including the answers to all your questions. You did attract this message. If you can believe that, you are on the way to the ultimate truth and, when seeing it, you will recognize it.”

— Robin Sacredfire

359. “Parallel Realities: While people sit in a coffee shop talking about their problems, challenges and struggles, I sit amongst them writing books with the solutions.”

— Robin Sacredfire

360. “People always get exactly what they believe to deserve, despite the fact that they may be unhappy with what they have. We are 100% responsible for our destiny, and I would dare saying 200%, because we do create the conditions for the future we end up attracting to our life. But the challenge is in learning to see it, and noticing how we do this. Therefore, there's really nothing to regret about life.”

— Robin Sacredfire

361. “People always need to put you in a box, because they don't understand what self-determinism is.”

— Robin Sacredfire

362. “People are always intrigued by me for different reasons. And so, they start searching for more; and the deeper they dig, the more confused they are. At first, they realize I am vegetarian and don't drink alcohol. That's strange for many, but still not enough to stop most of them. They then realize I am not just an author, but also a musician. After this, they realize this musician and writer, can also paint and draw, and research, and do tarot readings, and teach in universities about scientific topics. A little further along the road, they notice he can create websites, businesses and organize meetings with hundreds of people, talk in public, and through big radio stations, as if it was all the most natural thing to do. Then, they realize this person is connected to many religious groups, many of which seem to be completely contradictory. And, at this point, almost everyone has quitted their quest, and classified me as crazy, liar or anything else that makes them feel at peace in their little world. The spiritual ones, however, keep going. First, they realize I am an Indigo with past lives on Earth as well. Then, they analyze such past lives, and realize they were all quite meaningful. And well, then they get scared. The non-human part of me becomes too obvious, and they can't handle it. It scratches their ego and shadows on their self-esteem. They are actually scared of their own prophets. But I don't blame them. My mother was terrified when she found I could read her mind and was collecting notes about human behavior since I was seven years old, or learning in silence, in a dark room. I had to let her go for her to find her own peace of mind. I don't think she ever did. But all that is fine. I am not here to be accepted or apologize my existence. Everything passes, and this existence will pass as well."

— Robin Sacredfire

363. "People are funny when they say they would like to spend time with me because they admire me. I admire myself too. The question is, why would I spend my time with someone I don't admire?"

— Robin Sacredfire

364. "People are more afraid of being discriminated than living in ignorance."

— Robin Sacredfire

365. "People are often surprised when smart individuals get angry. But you see, speed and patience were never best friends. One can't wait and achieve at the same time. You either do something or you don't. You can't promise to do something while not doing, or expect the doing to be done while you wait. Maybe on another planet, but not on this one. If you think you can break this rule, you've literally alienated yourself."

— Robin Sacredfire

366. "People are so brainwashed by their belief system, that they actually think it is much better to have a job than to earn much more while sleeping. It doesn't feel right for them not to be a dependent slave."

— Robin Sacredfire

367. "People are vaccinated with dangerous chemicals during their childhood, indoctrinated with immorality through television while growing up, taught to reject God by their teachers, fed with genetically modified food, and led to suspect others by their relatives and friends, and then you wonder why it's so difficult to find a normal person in this modern world, why nobody assumes responsibility for their words and behavior, and why everyone is so selfishly abusive. The biblical apocalypse has begun and the zombies are everywhere. It's just that we call them stupid and selfish instead. But they do act like there's no life inside of them anymore. There are no more normal human beings around. The survivors of this apocalypse are extremely scarce and must be treasured."

— Robin Sacredfire

368. "People are what they do, what they did, how they think and what they eat. You can and should judge someone in such way. It is accurate. It will help you greatly in choosing your friends and your enemies wisely, but also in knowing whom to marry with."

— Robin Sacredfire

369. “People assume that I know all the answers to my decisions, because they logically must have reasons for theirs. However, if that was the case, I would not be living but thinking about life and assuming without living, as they often do.”

— Robin Sacredfire

370. “People change when they can act differently towards the same situations in order to achieve different results.”

— Robin Sacredfire

371. “People claim you should feel compassion for the weak. Well, that depends on the circumstances. Should you feel compassion for a donkey? In truth, it depends where you want to go, not the donkey or the compassion. If you wish to go nowhere, a dead donkey is as good as one alive. But if you want to hurt yourself, please choose a donkey that can kick you back and often.”

— Robin Sacredfire

372. “People don’t change because being accepted always precedes change. Like any software, their brain can’t invert this process. But this program was set on human souls for a reason. Evolution doesn’t pity the weak-minded. While the psychopaths self-destroy themselves, the empaths prosper and inherit the Earth.”

— Robin Sacredfire

373. “People easily believe in the transition of energy, image and voice through the air, and into their laptops and smartphones, but not in the transition of thought. And they easily accept the possibility of cloning animals and humans, or transforming them genetically, and even making hybrids with different species, but refuse to accept that we may be an hybrid species of two or more alien species as well.”

— Robin Sacredfire

374. “People have little importance to me because they are unconscious to their real self. And that self that I see in them, they can't see in themselves. They're only manifesting a very small portion of what they could become. Honesty and kindness could unlock many things in their spirit but most people are too afraid and trapped within themselves, their mind, their fake beliefs; and so, I observe everything in them that they may spend an entire lifetime never seeing. I know their wants, their qualities, their dreams, their needs, their spiritual lessons, their karma, and their past lives. They only know what their friends, trapped by the same ignorance, believe that they are.”

— Robin Sacredfire

375. “People interpret things in a linear form but science proves otherwise.”

— Robin Sacredfire

376. “People never remember who helped them conquer their dreams. When they truly achieve a lot, they often forget me easily. I've noticed the same behavior in both children and adults, and even in family members. And it's kind of interesting that they forget easily once taking ownership of their newly acquired skills. Probably, if they remembered, they wouldn't take them as their own. They would probably not even comprehend them. That's why I believe that, if you wish to change the world, you have to do the opposite; you have to not need it. Because, if you are really good, people will never appreciate you, and you will disappear into a world that merely reflects you better. You will dissolve into the world. The most enlightened individuals are never remembered by history because they have dissolved themselves into the world. There's no salt in their water, because the salty water has made them vanish from our records. We have neglected them from our history. That's why a person can't bet egotistical and help others at the same time. One thing has to give in."

— Robin Sacredfire

377. "People of Earth know nothing about the heart. And the ones who do, address love as the need to bleed. And it is indeed so. This materialistic world of mentally-obsessed humanoids will never allow true love to show itself. The ones who possess a better understanding, often walk alone, love alone, and feel alone, with their partners, groups and the world itself. Altruism is not a disease, a curse or a punishment, although it usually feels that way. Altruism is not even a price we pay for being spiritually free. Altruism, as death or birth, is just what it is. It just happens. The feelings attached to it are merely an awakening to the realization of the gap between oneself and the remaining of his prehistoric ancestors. One moves apart, into the future, in his evolution, and looks back at his brothers and sisters, trapped in the dogmas of the past, not realizing one can't travel in time in body but only in spirit. And in this sense, none of us ever escapes this prison. Not in body; only in mind. The mind has the key we look for outside ourselves. The heart helps the blind of spirit find it. And when humanity, as a whole, realizes this, it will ascend. But for now, unfortunately, many will have to suffer and pay with their own life, before this realization becomes common sense. Before the many books that have been written, are finally read by the masses and understood as they were intended by the authors; before we realize that all the wars are being fought in our mind and merely being represented in the material playground, like a theatrical play to which we all contribute with our own mental script, daily written and adjusted by the collective conscience and its concepts of right and wrong, true and false, justice and injustice, real and unreal."

— Robin Sacredfire

378. “People often come to me to ask questions about other authors. If they had read my books, they would not need to ask such questions. The contradiction between what their instinct tells them to do in search for answers and what their brain tells them to read is too obvious to be ignored. It is like drinking milk when wanting water, and asking me why the water tastes like milk. And yet, if the fools knew they were fools, they would not be fools. I respect the other authors, even when I know they have no value. They make people start asking questions that authors like me can answer; questions that otherwise they wouldn’t ask.”

— Robin Sacredfire

379. “People only value what they can't have and what they've lost. This applies to friends too. Before anyone become famous, he was a normal person as well. But during this time, he didn't have as many admirers and followers. That's a great paradox in life, for we are always alone in our path towards success, but never alone when we don't need anyone any longer.”

— Robin Sacredfire

380. “People say I have a wild imagination. I actually don't. You see, what I do consists in analyzing the patterns of a peculiar form of ignorance that emerges from the head of most I interact with, especially when dealing with groups; the same patterns that make their life boring and dramatic, full of problems and stress. And then, I merge and recombine that into a beautiful multicolored ball that I throw back at them, in the form of a joke or a lie that makes them laugh. But I didn't really create it; I merely gave a positive use to their own nonsense. And they love it. And yet, they always think I am the crazy one, the one with the wild imagination. But I am just an artist. I can only be creative by using the colors and forms given to me through observation. If I am good at everything I do with art, as with jokes, it is because I am a good artist.”

— Robin Sacredfire

381. “People tell me that I am impatient because they can't realize each year that passes represents over one percent of a life gone.”

— Robin Sacredfire

382. People tend to invert the most natural order of life, which is to move before things happen, instead of expecting things to happen to move.”

— Robin Sacredfire

383. “People think that life moves in a linear way, from point A to B. They think that they have been changing and evolving. But that is not the truth about what happens. Everyone is moving in circles. Along the way, we pick up pieces of our personality while discarding the parts that were not meant to be within us. Life is nothing more than a carousel. But those who are too distracted by the ride, by their sensations and emotions, completely ignore the purpose of it. And once they die, they come back for more. Again and again, life repeats itself as if it had not ended at all. A kind of amnesia and ignorance in what regards past lives, assures that the vast majority remains in this carousel of madness forever. It is not until you either realize that you have been going in circles and reaching nowhere, or you get sick enough with the ride, that you realize you've been trapped by a childlike mentality, in a fantasy world created to fool you. And this realization, represents the beginning of a painful journey towards freedom, the highest form of freedom a spiritual being can aspire to conquer in one lifetime - freedom from hell. Because what is hell but a carousel of madness, shapes and forms that imprison the mind with addictions in order to consume the soul until there are no more remains of what was once the original personality - the eternal being.”

— Robin Sacredfire

384. “People think they have complete freedom in their choices. They are wrong. There is a limited time for everything. Some opportunities manifest in seconds while others in years. But once that window closes, it's over; you won't get a second chance. Now, if you are not too dumb, or too egotistical, too obsessed with your own views on reality, you can actually see the opportunity closing itself in front of your eyes before it vanishes.”

— Robin Sacredfire

385. “People thinking that God abandoned them are deaf because they have no hope. How could God create life without hope?”

— Robin Sacredfire

386. “People use masks in public and then wonder why their personal life, their relationships, don't work. If you're not being honest with others, there's nothing real about yourself to learn and, the wider the gap, the deeper the suffering. The heart wasn't meant to be closed in a box made of fake feelings and thoughts.”

— Robin Sacredfire

387. “People want to worship the ones they admire and are shocked when noticing that they're just normal human beings.”

— Robin Sacredfire

388. “People who believe I have negative thoughts should remove themselves from my life; because it is likely that their hypocritical distorted positivity is the cause of it.”

— Robin Sacredfire

389. “People who can’t control their behavior have a problem with discipline. But lack of discipline over the body originates in a restless mind. The restless mind does not stop because it is not at peace. The mind cannot be at peace if the heart is in distress. A heart in distress is in search for love. The less love is in the heart, the more thoughts are in the mind, and, as a consequence, the more troubled is life. We then look at what reflects back at us, in the form of lack of love, but it’s just and always a reflection of what is and has been within us. Nevertheless, we can’t love the reflection expecting it to vanish into love; and we can’t love ourselves when we are constantly vanishing into our reflection. We can only understand that both are the same; and, in loving both, none will remain as it was. In doing so, we lose our ego and our reputation but win love.”

— Robin Sacredfire

390. “People who consider the world to be divided in two parts, are attached to the illusion of reality. There is no such thing as two parts; When you consider if it is better to have a job or your own business, you forget that jobs were created by business owners; When you consider if you should either be alone or live amongst others, you forget that the need for loneliness would't come to you without the awareness of suffering, which is a social skill; When you consider yourself a victim of your subconscious mind, you forget about the power of your conscious intentions and how they form your future; And when you forget that you forget, you allow yourself to be trapped within a duality that does not truly exist. So consider the world to be one, consider reality as one, consider yourself and your outcomes as within one single path and contributing for the same cause, and you will succeed in all your endeavors. After that, you will no longer see wins and losses, or winners and losers, but simply choices to be made; and, if you are honest with yourself, every single choice will make you prouder of being who you are.”

— Robin Sacredfire

391. “People who disagree with me tend to say we have cultural differences; and they feel insulted when I laugh before such comment. They are not developed enough to understand that I embrace a supreme culture. It’s called common sense.”

— Robin Sacredfire

392. “People who don't like to read shouldn't complain about the misfortunes of their life, for every misfortune is the result of ignorance, and ignorance is abundant among the lazy.”

— Robin Sacredfire

393. “People who encounter me cannot understand why I refuse to worship, either it is a religion, a prophet or a writer. They don't understand that I was born to be worshipped, and not worship. As me, many others have been here before and faced the same. People disdain, ignore and ridicule the living while worshipping the dead. And once I'm gone, the cycle repeats, with someone better than me facing what I face now. And I am great now, not three hundred years from now, when everyone will agree with this statement but I won't be here to disagree with it and show a better path.”

— Robin Sacredfire

394. “People who still laugh at the possibility of life on other planets, should first visit the more than 100 billion planets in the Milky-way that NASA claims to be able to support life, and before making their conclusions. Because a conclusion based on what is not known and not seen, is not a scientific conclusion, but a demonstration of stupidity at the highest level with the simplest arguments, by very lazy people, who don't read, don't know, don't care, and are too dumb and arrogant to listen.”

— Robin Sacredfire

395. “People who think their past can be forgotten, are assuming that anyone can fall in love with a mass murderer and pretend he never killed dozens of innocents. Obviously, they can't do that themselves; and yet, they think that way because they are narcissistic and selfish. And so, we can conclude that, whenever one demands something, he reveals his true nature.”

— Robin Sacredfire

396. “Personal energy is correlated with consciousness, which is shaped through different experiences in life.”

— Robin Sacredfire

397. “Planet Earth has rules that can't be broken, no matter how rich or poor you are. You either have a nine to five job, you're an artist constantly producing art, you're a businessman, or you stay home cleaning and taking care of children. And no matter if you're a man or a woman, the same rule applies to you. You break it, and life breaks you.”

— Robin Sacredfire

398. “Planet Earth is stuck in time for thousands and thousands of years. Evolution is nothing but a big illusion.”

— Robin Sacredfire

399 “Poor people can't understand this: It's not what you do that creates a fortune, but who you are.”

— Robin Sacredfire

400. “Probably, the greatest secret hidden from me during my entire life, was that the ones opposing me the most were terribly afraid of my skills and jealous of my potential. My existence was a threat to their ego. If I had known that, my life would have went in a very different direction, one which would have allowed me to reach my goals much sooner, likely twenty years sooner, and without any resentment or emotional scars. Basically, I would not have spent so many years asking myself why.”

401. “Psychiatry doesn’t heal, it controls, and it doesn’t deal with the soul, but with the brain. It is the ultimate weapon against spiritual consciousness, when the educational system and the social structure seem to fail in producing functional slaves.”

— Robin Sacredfire

402. “Psychologically unhealthy people are sad, depressed, incapable of defining their wants and needs, incapable of choosing an occupation they like, incapable of accepting unconditional love, and incapable of respecting or admiring someone. Psychologically unhealthy people are cowards in disguise and they can only fear. Once in a relationship or friendship with such people, they will make you believe they depend on you to be happy, but they can’t be happy. That is what they say to keep you for long enough, to feed on you for long enough, to consume your energy for long enough. Psychologically unhealthy people are already dead in spirit. They can only feed on emotions. Psychologically unhealthy people can only make you feel sad, lost, demotivated and incapable. But that is merely the surface, the resulting consequence of losing your energy to someone else that can merely feed on you. And psychologically unhealthy people know that already. That is why they make you believe they need you. They do need you. That is how they survive. Without people like you, they die, they literally die. Their body and mind cannot survive without an external source of energy. Because, truly, energy comes from the soul, and they have none. Their soul is drifting in hell. When someone like you leaves them, they tend to get a deadly disease rather fast, because a body without energy, which comes from the spirit, is too weak to fightback a disease.”

403. “Reality is not what you see but what is, and you don't know what is until you are yourself first.”

— Robin Sacredfire

404. “Reincarnation is when I tell a girl that I write spiritual books and she thinks I'm a monk. She has a medieval soul still stuck in time.”

— Robin Sacredfire

405. “Reincarnation isn't something in which I choose to believe but rather a truth I accept. Most people will never know the meaning of their friendships, passions, choices and even challenges. I embrace them, knowing that there's always a perfect correlation between everything, including between us and the ones who love us and betray us at the end. That's how I know I'm almost never traveling somewhere but returning, or not meeting someone but fixing the past, or facing a challenge but ending a karmic cycle. If I was a Japanese Buddhist Monk, a Chinese Warrior, a Native American Hunter, a Scottish Doctor, a French Monarch, or a Spanish Templar, none of that really matters, not as much as what I experienced and believed during that time, not as much as what I did ten years ago or what I believed during my childhood, not as much as who I am now and what I can do with my life at the present moment.”

— Robin Sacredfire

406. “Relationships between two persons exist so that both can grow together and learn to live by sharing emotions and personal reflections, including the most private.”

— Robin Sacredfire

407. “Religion is softcore - God is good, Satan is evil. Be good, avoid Evil. Give money if you can, receive charity if you can't. If a person does evil, forgive, and if he does good, love him. A cult is hardcore - evil and good are the same and subjected only to perspective, and you must tell the difference by experience, not books. Do good through evil, and justify evil to get good. You are your own god and you must take responsibility for everything in your life, including the things you attract subconsciously. Give all your money away, because you can always double and even triple that amount with enough willpower. Give charity to nobody but help those who help you. And I would say most people prefer the softcore version of reality, but I am not saying, however, that either is good or bad. I'm just sarcastically showing the differences. I know members from both sides of this reality and I love them all. It's actually interesting to notice that many in religions behave as if in cults, and claim that their religion is not a cult, while many cults claim to be religious, and don't even admit your right to personal thoughts. Well, they can't stop you from thinking, but your thoughts only end when you reach the same conclusions they have.”

— Robin Sacredfire

408. “Religion isn't something in which you believe but something you understand.”

— Robin Sacredfire

409. “Religious people never believe I write books. Someone should tell them that books aren't only produced in monasteries anymore.”

— Robin Sacredfire

410. “Religion presents itself merely as a stimulus for the spiritual senses and never as a true path or food for the soul.”

— Robin Sacredfire

411. “Remember that we become what we believe that we should be, so resentment may stop us from realizing it. Resentment and victimization affect your vibration and lead you to attract challenges related to more situations that make you feel like a victim and resentful.”

— Robin Sacredfire

412. “Ridiculing and laughing about something they don't understand is what the ignorant do. So you better learn to accept it. Because the more you move forward in life and do things that others consider impossible, the more you will see, and the more you will understand, and the more you will also notice such reactions. The ultimate prize of the wisest, and also their ultimate sacrifice, is loneliness.”

— Robin Sacredfire

413. “Satan always wins. I tried to convince one girlfriend to stop smoking marijuana, and explained to her the long term effects it has on the brain and, as a consequence, on her health and the health of our relationship; but all it took was one of her possessed friends to seduce her back into it, for her to neglect everything I had said for several months. Satan won. Another girlfriend, struggling with emotional issues and depression, went to a psychiatrist to talk about her relationship with me, and the psychiatrist shown her, through several tests, that her brain was in very bad shape and she needed therapy urgently. But all it took was one of her possessed friends to suggest her that she should sleep with another man instead, and forget about me, and in one night she wasted five years of investment on someone she loved. When she regretted, it was too late to get me back. Satan won. Satan always wins. And I am infuriated by this fact, and always infuriated when seeing, with my own eyes, how easily the vast majority of the people fall in the traps of Satan, how horribly stupid and ungrateful they are, to me, to life, to God, and even to themselves. The vast majority of the human race is extremely easy to seduce, to fall into temptation, and reject paradise. But maybe that is exactly what makes them all sons of Satan. They are not good even to themselves. They suffer for their own constant sins, life after life, after life, after life. And how very sad it is, that when presented with the fruit of temptation, shown in different forms, these people throw themselves at hell in life and death, and give away the promise of eternal happiness.”

414. “Science fiction doesn't show me much about alien's nature but shows a lot about North American nature.”

— Robin Sacredfire

415. “Science is only scientific for as long as it is open to self-criticism. When scientists refuse to embrace new findings because they support spirituality, they're being dogmatic. And when someone supports himself in outdated scientific dogmas, that person is being religiously ignorant. When such things occur, science has been defeated with the same arguments used to justify its existence against any dogma or religion, nullifying its value in the process.”

— Robin Sacredfire

416. “Self-destruction is the ultimate victory fools seek the most. Rivalry, arrogance and resentment will certainly lead them there.”

— Robin Sacredfire

417. “Since any effort always translates into more learning about a particular subject, we logically believe that we can determine our success in a linear fashion, but this doesn’t happen because our self-image always filters our perception of reality.”

— Robin Sacredfire

418. “Six big companies refused to refund me for a bad service. I humiliated them, I threaten them, I kept their product, and I made them pay for every cent at the end. My girlfriend at the time asked me for some time off and challenged me. I dumped her without further discussion. My computer demanded a break. And so I broke it. I have some of its letters being shipped from across the world while I type without them, for seventeen hours a day, from Monday to Sunday. And yet, this world still seriously underestimates the one who was born in the darkness and shaped by the fire.”

— Robin Sacredfire

419. “Some encounter me in person, know I am a writer, and don’t trust the value of my words. Some encounter my books, know me later, and don’t trust the value of my friendship. Both doubt themselves.”

— Robin Sacredfire

420. “Some men have the power to make women look more beautiful than they were. Most men make women uglier than they were. Most women don’t know how to choose men, and despise the ones they should treasure, because they have a poor self-worth.”

— Robin Sacredfire

421. “Some people are born to be like chickens; they wait for the corn to appear in exchange for their eggs, they give their life for what they believe, and they never dare to leave the house of their owners. Others are born to be like eagles. They want to have the responsibility of owning their fate and hunt for what they eat, they will take lives for what they believe if necessary, and they rather die than be owned. And it is an inevitable fact that human beings are always born with one of these two natures and you can't do anything to change it. They are either prey or predator. Chickens fear eagles; eagles despise chickens. Chickens think it's difficult to live like an eagle; eagles think it is humiliating to live like a chicken. Chickens are the majority; eagles are the minority. Chickens are accepted and encouraged to multiply for the benefit of the system they feed; eagles are persecuted, isolated and killed to protect this same system.

— Robin Sacredfire

422. “Some people are just weak and vulnerable but not dangerous. By using our heart, we can more easily choose the right words when communicating with them.”

— Robin Sacredfire

423. “Some people believe in the majority; Others believe in authors that the majority follows. The ones in the first group believe what they see and the ones in the second group what they read. And yet, both are equally ignorant of their ignorance, vulnerable to the claws of reality, like rats in the night.”

— Robin Sacredfire

424. “Some people get offended by what I write, by what I do with my life and by what I say to those they never saw. And they also get offended when told they are too ignorant to have the right to judge anyone.

These poor souls don't know that respect and intelligence are correlated.”

— Robin Sacredfire

425. “Some people go to college to learn how to repeat the same task every day for the rest of their life and then wonder why their salary is low and machines are replacing them, but the truth is that they have tried to train monkeys before creating the machines and it did not work so well.”

— Robin Sacredfire

426. “Some people have asked me if I can channel spirits. Yes, I can. Some asked me if I can access my past-lives. Yes, I can do that too. Others asked me if I can predict the future. And yes, I can do that as well. However, in the few times I channelled spirits, they wrote worse books than mine. In my past-lives, I wasn't as wise as I am now. And the future isn't relevant, if I can't control the present.”

— Robin Sacredfire

427. “Some people I encounter tell me: ‘I would like to talk more with you in private because you are such an interesting person.’ And if I tell them I already know that, they call me arrogant. But they never consider that, just like them, I'm also looking for interesting people to talk with. Only if I was arrogant, would I be interested in talking to someone that has nothing to offer me apart from an ego boost.”

— Robin Sacredfire

428. “Some people say that I'm too sensitive and get angry easily but if they had the chance to travel back in time, to a medieval period, without internet or TV, full of dumb ignorant souls everywhere, aggressive individuals that can't understand a thing about moral, they would understand me better. I come from such higher perspective.”

— Robin Sacredfire

429. “Some people think that they are punishing me when they hit their head against a wall. If that's not insane, I wonder what is. ‘Yes’, they say to themselves, ‘I'm going to punish you for being my boyfriend, by insulting you and destroying our relationship’; ‘I'm going to punish you for taking me on vacations, by disappearing, even if you're the one with the house-keys’; ‘I'm going to punish you for giving me books to read, by not reading them’; ‘I'm going to punish you for complaining about my behavior, by becoming a much worse person’; and well, why not too, why not committing suicide to prove me that their life has no value and I am wrong in thinking it does?’ It is so sad when people are literally as stupid and dumb as they are insane.”

— Robin Sacredfire

430. “Some people wish they could live one thousand years. I wish I could reduce one thousand years in twenty. Some people wish they knew their past-lives. I wish I could live my future-lives right now, all at once. Some people think I've done a lot in my life. I know I didn't even reach one third of what I want.”

— Robin Sacredfire

431. “Some women tell me that they don't think what I do is important, but would like to travel the world with me. Others say they're not a slut, even though they slept with many strangers. And then many others claim to love me, even though disrespecting my beliefs and ridiculing my knowledge. And I wonder if some people are just purely addicted to suffering. They then say I'm not spiritual when I call them names and expel them from my life. But on the contrary, a spiritual person is very awake, not just spiritually, but mentally too. The real and most spiritual ones are not braindead. They will give you hell if you give them suffering. Hell is very real and they can show you that better than anyone else. Otherwise, they're not spiritual, but pretending to be. Spirituality is reality, not cuckoo land full of unicorns and fairies."

— Robin Sacredfire

432. "Someone once told me that I'm a parasite of society because I don't need to work to make a living. He was unemployed, living with his parents, and asked if I could offer him some of the books I wrote."

— Robin Sacredfire

433. "Someone told me she loves her job because the company offers her food, medicine and gym, and I started to wonder if I am a human imagining people in a zoo or a monkey in a zoo imagining he is human."

— Robin Sacredfire

434. "Sometimes I have to act crazy to handle the crazies. Trying to be normal near the crazies makes me as crazy as them. The more I push reason and logic on them, the more they pervert it and use it against me, the angrier they make me feel. It's much easier to pretend they're ghosts talking to the wind, and ignore them as if they weren't really human. My mood improves, my self-esteem gets better and I feel happier. On another hand, maybe I'm just being realistic here, because you can't really talk to the dead. That's what people without respect or empathy are, brain-dead, just walking bodies without a soul."

— Robin Sacredfire

435. "Sometimes I wonder which one is worse: the woman who is stupid or the one who reads books written by stupid authors."

— Robin Sacredfire

436. "Sometimes life simply doesn't work in our favor, for a multitude of reasons. But if we keep investing, with faith, in our future, when the time comes, when the winds blow favorably in our direction, our speed will be much faster than normal."

— Robin Sacredfire

437. "Sometimes you need to put a fire to know where the snakes hide."

— Robin Sacredfire

438. "Speak the truth and do it as much as you can, and the liar will be forced to adapt the lie until he can't anymore."

— Robin Sacredfire

439. "Spirituality without hate is a lie. If you can't feel anger, you can't feel love. Empathy without disgust isn't truly empathy. When you become more aware, you become more aware of everything. That makes you more sensitive too - sensitive to cry and sensitive to hate."

— Robin Sacredfire

440. "Strong emotions create significant changes."

— Robin Sacredfire

441. "Stubbornness is the art of listening to many wrong opinions and consider them factual while adjusting the truth to a delusional perspective that deprives one from gaining more consciousness."

— Robin Sacredfire

442. "'Study, get a job, get married, have a baby or two and die,' they say. Why nobody wants the prize?"

— Robin Sacredfire

443. “Stupidity, as death, is inevitable. You can't stop death, but you can stop stupidity by reading books.”

— Robin Sacredfire

444. “Sugar is for the body as narcissism is for the soul. Both pleasures kill.”

— Robin Sacredfire

445. “Surrendering: The act of giving yourself entirely to a new self, and then let go of your personal freedom for the achievement of something greater than you had before, a new you, a new self, envisioned and designed by yourself. Surrendering, to God or to a Dream, or to both, is the ultimate act of designing your new future and then letting go the present reality to live that dream. It is, indeed, the creation of a virtual reality in which one will find himself present, after detaching from the previous reality, which will then become virtual by default. Because, as one cannot surrender without accepting, one cannot get without letting go. And so, when one surrenders entirely, he becomes entirely new.”

— Robin Sacredfire

446. “Sympathy is the self-delusional feeling of assuming that someone you know, who is ignorant, depressed, frustrated, and losing much in life, and maybe even terribly lonely and feeling abandoned by society, deserves your compassion, help or understanding, while in fact what they really want is to self-destroy themselves and take you along in that airplane made of delusion before they finally crash and burn.”

— Robin Sacredfire

447. “Seeking for perfection is like seeking for mental health without a definition of what it is. But if psychology and psychiatry are as lost as the people they consistently evaluate, and people are as imperfect as the imperfection they see in others, then I have to conclude that it is as wise to accept judgment as it is to judge first the ones who judge us. But it is also as wise as it is foolish to do so; for it is like seeking for a definition that can't entirely define us. Because if one answer can explain a thousand questions, a billion questions would never amount to the importance of an answer, which the simpler it is, the more questions it answers. And in this sense, I must say, we are imperfectly perfect."

— Robin Sacredfire

448. "Some men shouldn't procreate. But then again, I look at the women they're with, and I realize they're just doing us all a favor, by increasing the extinction rate of their subspecies."

— Robin Sacredfire

449. "Someone asked me: 'Why do you always need to be right?' I asked back for an example of a situation where I was likely wrong but this person became silent. And I had to conclude she had none. Because I was indeed always right, not by need, but as a fact she couldn't accept."

— Robin Sacredfire

450. "Stupidity is not lack of intelligence or knowledge. Stupidity is when you are offered a book and you don't read it. Stupidity is when you have the chance to learn from a good teacher and you choose to remain arrogant and defend useless beliefs; Stupidity is when life offers you an opportunity to grow and change and overcome your past, but you can't break free from your habits and rather remain stuck to your old beliefs. Stupidity is when you insult the one who could make you free from your state of stupidity by using stupid affirmations and stupid arguments. Stupidity is always a choice, not a state of being."

— Robin Sacredfire

451. “Talking to the spiritually blind, the undead, the sleeping souls of this world, is like talking to the actors of a movie that was already made about what they will do next, except that these actors don't believe they will do what they already did in the future, and refuse to take responsibility for what they did in the past and are doing now, all of which are behaviors that will have as a future consequence the predicted scene.”

— Robin Sacredfire

452. “Tears are a wonderful thing. They cleanse the eyes and the heart. Thanks to our tears, we can better see the world and our true friends.”

— Robin Sacredfire

453. “That which you cannot oppose becomes part of you.”

— Robin Sacredfire

454. “The ability to make a decision doesn't require the absence of doubt or fear. Both vanish in the presence of responsibility, which emerges naturally in the presence of will. When we know what we truly want, the doubts that blur our decisions, the fears that make us succumb to luck and fate, all become secondary in the face of reason. That's when we understand that our freewill and our options weren't really there. We have created both by desire. The decision is basically consciousness asking us to act on our subconscious desires.”

— Robin Sacredfire

455. “The alchemical steps to attract success are always the same, although manifested differently in each person.”

— Robin Sacredfire

456. “The amount of time needed to change reality is relative to the capability of the individual to accept such change.”

— Robin Sacredfire

457. “The arrogant one seeks those who admire him as much as the humble seeks those whom he admires. That is why the arrogant seem popular but are ignorant and lonely, while the humble may not be popular but are wiser and secretly loved by many.”

— Robin Sacredfire

458. “The attempt of trying to solve a social problem without analyzing responsibilities is like trying to understand why a gun was shot without talking to the one using it.”

— Robin Sacredfire

459. “The average time for karma to produce results is five years. I mean, five years for a company to prove itself or end, but also for a person to achieve success or failure. Now, if you really persist in doing something truly good for five years of your life, you must conquer the results you envisioned, if you did so. And the same applies for the ignorant. If you ignore the potential of those around you, if you ignore your life partner, if you ignore the needs of others, if you are ignorant about yourself and waste your time for five years, then expect to get karma back after that period as well. Life is wonderful, even for the stupid, but you shouldn't need negative consequences to learn something useful from it.”

— Robin Sacredfire

460. “The best choice for any person is always the one which brings back the highest impact.”

— Robin Sacredfire

461. “The best currency in the world is admiration. If you admire yourself, you will do what makes you feel good. If you admire the people around you, you will want to be surrounded by those you truly love. If you admire your results, you will not want poor results. If you admire your life, you will always work hard to be at your best. If you admire admiration, you will always feel like a little child, in love with everything that life has to offer. And these are the formulas for success. But formulas are nothing without admiration. Admiration will take you very far in life, and much faster than any wind or wave.”

— Robin Sacredfire

462. “The best thing I did in life wasn't learning or reading but training my mind to think effectively.”

— Robin Sacredfire

463. “The best way to analyze anyone consists in mirroring their behaviors and words, as when you do it, they reveal their true intentions.”

— Robin Sacredfire

464. The best way to defeat someone, consists in accepting their tools for argument, for when doing so and proving them wrong, you disarm them and make them retreat from your life.”

— Robin Sacredfire

465. “The biggest challenge in life, from what I came to understand, comes from people trying to stop us. Apart from that, there's no challenge greater enough to defeat an inspired person.”

— Robin Sacredfire

466. “The biggest trap in life consists in achieving illusions after years of hard work and realizing that there's nothing there but an empty you.”

— Robin Sacredfire

467. “The constant cycle of ideas I get are orders received by God, and the people I meet are assignments He gives me in order to fulfill his tasks.”

— Robin Sacredfire

468. “The coward and the ignorant are equally afraid of failure and humiliation. Escape is not a choice for them, as they find themselves having to live amongst others. And so, they insult in a regular basis in order to feel safer, safe from the ones they fear but also admire - the wise and courageous.”

— Robin Sacredfire

469. “The duality and the freewill don't exist. There's only one choice to be made, the one that brings us upwards. Self-destruction is not a choice. And yet, every duality presents exactly that, and not really a choice.”

— Robin Sacredfire

470. “The ego is an amazing mechanism. You don't need to fight it back. You just need to realize that you'll come back to Earth and face everything you have done before. I'm counting on the fact that I will find my books, read them and learn everything I will forget along the way, everything I've started to forget. I'm counting on that to become a better human being, to encounter more people like me, and to have a better existence. That makes me humble, even though it doesn't imply refusing the power of my ego. I simply go through it to overcome it.”

— Robin Sacredfire

471. “The ego is not the enemy. You are. God created the ego to stop you from helping yourself when you don't deserve any help. The ego will push the best people away, will make you arrogant and will lead you to disgrace and self-destruction. The ego is there to destroy you. But you are the one who makes it grow with immorality and disrespect.”

— Robin Sacredfire

472. “The ego is the cancer of the soul. It feeds on the pleasures of the reputation.”

— Robin Sacredfire

473. “The error is the beginning and not the end of a study. The one who most errs has more chances to learn.”

— Robin Sacredfire

474. “The fundamental difference between me and my critics comes to this: When they say something, a few people trust them, for a while, until what they say is forgotten; When I say or write something, over a million people, every single year, listen and read. Over time, my words can literally obliterate even the awareness that such critics ever existed. This is not arrogance; It's power. A power they fear, for very obvious reasons. For I can completely wipe out any signs of their life. And I consciously do it with a smile on my face lightened by the almighty power of God, the sword of truth in my hands and the fire of consciousness coming from my mouth. Liars will always fear me because their criticism cannot match that and they know it. That's why my existence infuriates them, and they scream and insult, and attack my reputation, like demons knowing that their last days are coming soon, and faster by my presence.”

— Robin Sacredfire

475. “The insane mistake the purpose of a conversation for a game of power, reason that identifying weaknesses is more important than logic, value selfish opinions over common agreements, neglect a common goal to protect a personal illusion.”

— Robin Sacredfire

476. “The most noble arts are also the most ignored by the great mass of common people, who in their nature will never understand nobility and by default can only become exemplified consequences of ignorance. Philosophy will teach you the art of thinking; Painting will teach you the art of observing; Sports will teach you the art of persisting; Performing, as in music and theatre, will teach you the art of being; Cooperation will teach you the art of trusting; and all of them combined, will teach you the art of living. The art of living is not composed of excellency in all these arts, but the capacity to discern rational and irrational, truth and lie, strength and weakness, soul and ego, good and evil.”

— Robin Sacredfire

477. “The only good thing that the fools ever did for me, was to inspire me to write about them, so that others could learn.”

— Robin Sacredfire

478. “The only thing secretive about secret societies is the fear that the arrogant inside these groups have of sharing the little they know, because they often don’t even understand their own books and struggle with little. Their real fear is that someone may come along, understand everything better and faster than they do and before they can, and then, by default, lead them to exclusion by ignorance. On the other hand, their fear blinds them from knowing more and identifying those who can take them to a higher level, the same individuals that they claim to be waiting for and that only appear in every thousand of years cycles. This paradox is what leads their groups to extinction by self-imposed destructive behavior, or to practices that are in a complete contradiction towards what their founder or founders intended. As a matter of fact, the more this reality manifests before our eyes, the easier it is to find quotes in books written by founders of such groups in complete contradiction to what you hear everyone inside these groups speaking. And what I'm really saying here, is that Freemasonry, Rosicrucianism, Scientology, and many other groups out there, have for long lost their entitlement to ownership of their own name, and as much as Christianity is today more in tune to an evil God than a benevolent one. Their real intention, even if manifested mostly at a subconscious level, is to keep away anyone who contradicts what they want to see, rather than accepting what they should be seeing. Ironically, they are doing exactly what was done unto them by the Inquisition, the Nazis, the Egyptians, and any other group that once opposed them. They are their own enemy. And when their prophet comes, they neglect him, ridicule him, ignore him and even conspire against him. They are the greatest shame of their own ancestors. They are the poison they fear. They are the real enemy of their own group."

— Robin Sacredfire

479. "The purpose of a relationship is not to recycle trash created by others, but to create a synergetic ecosystem of emotions where everything is well balanced and in harmony, to allow peace, happiness and wealth streaming into the life of the members of a family, either composed by two or more."

— Robin Sacredfire

480. "The purpose of life on Earth is to acquire responsibility over our behavior."

— Robin Sacredfire

481. "The fools always think I am arrogant and lucky. That is the exact mindset that keeps them in the darkness. They can't see that consistent and continuous success in life is composed of an intimate relation between values and paradigms. And they have no clue in what regards noble values and efficient paradigms. They can't identify good and efficient. Their evaluations are poor. And their poor mindset keeps them stupid.”

— Robin Sacredfire

482. “The supreme level in any study, consists in the union of what we love with what we hate.”

— Robin Sacredfire

483. “The system fears only those with the potential to destroy it. And the ones who have their heart and mind plugged into the system, fear the end of it as much as they fear their own end. Their reasons to attack are merely theorizations of the realistic possibilities they can put to form, to justify their emotions, which otherwise could not be explained.“

— Robin Sacredfire

484. ”The weak are so unaware of their futility as souls, that they can't even perceive the irrationality of their actions.”

— Robin Sacredfire

485. “The fact that most people are narcissistic and arrogant, is what makes them deaf to those who know far much more than them.”

— Robin Sacredfire

486. “The fools read books written by those who don't understand themselves and question the wise; The wise understand themselves and answer the fools who question them in ways the fools can't understand.”

— Robin Sacredfire

487. “The fruits of our actions are always interconnected with the roots of honesty towards our inner self. The liar is an enemy to himself.”

— Robin Sacredfire

488. “The funniest thing people say to me is, ‘I wish I had your life.’ Hello! I make a living writing about it.”

— Robin Sacredfire

489. “The future generations will look at the leaders of our time and laugh at their arrogant conviction on their ignorance.”

— Robin Sacredfire

490. “The future is meant to be a secret to those who can't handle life. Premonitions and the ability to see into the future, are only given to those who have the wisdom to make the right decisions, from which, accepting happiness is the most basic one.”

— Robin Sacredfire

491. “The highs and lows of life are equally important, for in the highest moments you know who admires you the most, and in the lowest ones, you know who are the cowards who won't support you.”

— Robin Sacredfire

492. “The humblest people have a special kind of wisdom that only the most enlightened or highly diabolical can feel.”

— Robin Sacredfire

493. “The hypocrites think that while I am writing a book without time to apply the theory I am failing at what I write about. When I finally apply it and they notice the results, they call me lucky. When the results maintain themselves in time, they wish to learn how I did it. And yet, they were never ready before and they're not ready later either. That's why I can spend hours explaining to them everything and they understand nothing. Those with the capacity to understand, read without the need to judge the author, and trust what their heart shows them as being the truth."

— Robin Sacredfire

494. "The idea that a woman makes herself become more independent by opening her legs to any man she wants, shadows the fact that her self-worth is lowered every time she does that at the eyes of the man she will always dream to have."

— Robin Sacredfire

495. "The imbecile always want to give suggestions on areas they know nothing about. There you have, arrogance and ignorance supporting one another and justifying the existence of both. You see it in the person who is single but insists in giving relationship advice to others, in the one who can barely keep his job but insists in giving suggestions about business and in those who insist that everyone should be more ethical while they, themselves, commit unethical actions."

— Robin Sacredfire

496. "The increasing number of people, both men and women, who obsessively stare at others wherever they go, and even while walking outside, shows me that the value of humanity is decreasing, for a human being who is too busy in improving his own life doesn't have time or interest in trying to copy or judge the life of others. You have to be truly empty within yourself to relate your fears with what others are doing, dressing or busy in being. If you're anxious about the being of others, you're not being anything."

— Robin Sacredfire

497. “The joy of seeing another person in pain, frustrated or angry, is a delicacy only for the most wicked.”

— Robin Sacredfire

498. “The knowledge of truth is the only true knowledge worth knowing.”

— Robin Sacredfire

499. “The law of manifestation operates like a triangle: First, know what you want and visualize it as if you already had it; Second, see it behind the illusion of reality, practice it in your decisions, choose the people you hang out with, and so on; Third, believe, have faith and work on your emotions to be at the right frequency. This triangle of manifestation is one of the secrets of many religions: Christianity, Scientology, and Freemasonry. In Masonry is seen as “heart, mind and desire”; in Scientology is perceived as “reality, communication and affinity”; in Christianity is understood as “Father, son and holy ghost”; basically, “actions, lessons and emotions”. In Christianity, the Father equals reality or the Creator of the illusion, the son is the way, the path, the road of our decisions and actions, and the holy ghost is our heart, instincts and desires manifested in that same path. In other words, through Jesus, and with the power of the holy ghost, you reach God. This is an allegory that not many Christians can understand. Jesus represents behavior - right and wrong, the holy ghost is our faith, your heart and emotions reflecting back at you what you attract, it's the energy that connects you to your dreams, and God represents the Architect of Reality. So, through moral behavior and positive emotions, you understand God and life, and then you receive “paradise”. This paradise is whatever you dream for yourself. Furthermore, if someone has shown you this path, he has been as an angel to you, a messenger of God; if someone stopped you from reaching it, he has been as a demon, a worker for Satan, the enemy; if you failed in seeing this path, you have redirected yourself towards hell. And if you hate your life, you are already in hell. If you want to get out of hell, you must accept the truth, and the truth is that you must know God, for He is the ultimate truth; He and the truth are one and the same.”

— Robin Sacredfire

513. “The most important individuals on Earth have went underground, either for political, social or personal reasons. Ostracized by a society that ignores their most basic rights, they work alone to save the world. Invisible to the five senses, they work from the most unbelievable places, places where they're hardly found, or, when found, never recognized. They're risking their life for those who show no appreciation or support, for those who rather spend ten dollars on a meal than two on a book, for those that, to a great extent, have ridiculed them for a longer time than the one in which they've shown respect.”

— Robin Sacredfire

514. “The naive tend to think that, by feeding a snake, it will turn into a koala one day. I know it because I do the same. I helped a girlfriend find therapy in a religious group, and she started putting them against me, while taking information to suppress me and call me evil, to make me feel guilty for what she did and couldn't take responsibility for; and as she insisted in not ending the relationship, I then demanded that she saw a psychologist. That's when she started asking ‘Why do you think that way about me?’. She did not stop lying, she did not stop insulting and she did not stop destroying my life. She merely became better at all those things. She took my help as food, turned from a snake to an anaconda, and started suffocating me with her mind games.”

— Robin Sacredfire

518. “The one who loves us will help in extracting the evil within, so that we can have more space for the development of what is truly beautiful in us.”

— Robin Sacredfire

519. “The one who runs from his shadows sleeps with the devil at night.”

— Robin Sacredfire

520. “The one who says, ‘I am afraid to love you more than you love me’, has no idea of what love is.”

— Robin Sacredfire

521. “The one who truly loves, imposes conditions, the necessary conditions to allow the expansion of love and extinction of hate.”

— Robin Sacredfire

522. “The only difference between a religion and a cult is that, in a religious group, if you contradict them, they call you stupid in a polite way, and in a cult, if you do that, you are expelled.”

— Robin Sacredfire

523. “The only reason why people fail in achieving their dreams, is because they want to change their life without changing themselves. The two things are correlated. A person with more freedom, has deserved it, by acquiring a higher level of responsibility and awareness. Responsibility comes from compromising oneself and suppressing egotistical needs. Awareness comes from knowledge, persistent studying and constant changes towards our dreams. Only when a person embraces both, can this person have more freedom.”

— Robin Sacredfire

524. “The only reason why the stupid remain stupid, is because their ego is so big that it surpasses the vast immensity of their stupidity. For as long as arrogance encompasses a larger scale than stupidity, the stupid won’t know they are stupid. That is why humiliating the arrogant is the only way to truly help them. That is why the arrogant insult others; and that’s also how they ask for help. It is as if they were saying ‘there is a demon inside of me, and this demon controls my mind, and I show him to you, so that you can humiliate him, so that my true self can be released from his claws.’ And well, there is no such thing as a kind exorcism; you can’t talk a demon into leaving his victim. The only way an exorcism will ever work is by humiliating demons. Such is the purpose of a prayer. And for as long as you are within the protection of God, you won't succumb to arrogance, the trap Satan uses to leave you at the mercy of one of his demons, all of which will make you stupid first, before they lead you to self-destruction through isolation and deception."

— Robin Sacredfire

525. "The only things worth working for are love and trust, and you increase your value by being lovable and trustworthy."

— Robin Sacredfire

526. "The opposite of oppression is not anarchy but self-discipline. The opposite of commitment is not rebellion but morality. The opposite of religion is not atheism but wisdom. Whoever runs away from what he fears, becomes consumed by his own fears."

— Robin Sacredfire

527. "The path to wealth is also the path to our spiritual identity."

— Robin Sacredfire

528. "The person who refuses to change is changed, such as when one person divorces another."

— Robin Sacredfire

529. "The person you'll become interferes with your own perceptions at the present."

— Robin Sacredfire

530. "The positive outcome from an investment on success will become the emotional amount that can quantitatively empower you in the following investment."

— Robin Sacredfire

531. “The problem of the world is not evil. The real problem is cowardice. If the world did not have so many cowards, there would be no room for evil to hide. The reason behind the nature of the cowards lays in their weakness. Weakness comes from the lack of moral values, lack of virtue, lack of conscience regarding right and wrong, and lack of a spiritual awareness.”

— Robin Sacredfire

532. “The problem with modern feminists is that they're so motivated by competing against men that they end up becoming more masculine than men themselves, which makes them start complaining that men aren't masculine enough. Well then, when you become more masculine than men, only a gorilla can satisfy you, and that's why such women end up with what is known as bad boys. When they marry them, they then complain that their husband is an idiot and a cheater. This whole time, they couldn't see that they destroyed everything along the way by simply refusing to just be a woman. Because, you see, there's nothing wrong with that. There's nothing wrong with being a woman. But there are many things terribly wrong with being a modern feminist, especially, if the goal does not consist in fighting for women's rights to be feminine, to be a woman.”

— Robin Sacredfire

533. “The prostitutes of Satan can't think for themselves, believe in anything they are told, interpret the Bible according to what someone else tells them to see, and assume that everyone else who isn't within their eyesight is inferior and doesn't deserve compassion. Satan rejoices on their blood and awaits for them in hell.”

— Robin Sacredfire

534. “The reasons which make people stupid are never related to lack of knowledge but lack of belief, lack of belief in the worth of time spent reading and asking questions, in the belief that the stupid can get spontaneously smarter.”

— Robin Sacredfire

535. “The scariest word most people ever hear is truth. Many tell me that truth is subjective. But is your reality a subjective experience? See now how tricky this is? You can think about it. Because the truth is that the more subjective your reality is, the crazier you will become. And yet, you won’t find objectiveness in others, for they’re all, and to a great extent, living inside subjective realities controlled by a non-objective will.”

— Robin Sacredfire

536. “The secret to success is no secret. Be honest in your words, be trustworthy and share value. Most people won’t tell the difference, but those who do are your followers.”

— Robin Sacredfire

537. “The shortest path to success in art, if I could put it into words, is altruism, but if you don’t care about anything in the world, and even get angry at people that show you the truth, how can you be altruistic?”

— Robin Sacredfire

538. “The truth above all truths is an unseen spiritual war.”

— Robin Sacredfire

539. “The truth is more complex than it seems and a good heart has more impact than anyone else with a thousand words and actions.”

— Robin Sacredfire

540. “The comprehension of reality always emerges through the emotions that reality provides us.”

— Robin Sacredfire

541. “The stupid are addicted to problems, drama, conflicts and confusion. They really are. Because they are stupid. They can't read and understand what someone tells them. They can't learn. They have to do stupid things to learn. They do that because they are stupid. The stupid can only learn in stupid ways. And the most stupid way to learn anything is to create a war.”

— Robin Sacredfire

542. “The universe likes speed, focus and dedication. Whatever we put our attention on, drives miracles towards us without much effort.”

— Robin Sacredfire

543. “The vast majority is sociologically intellectual and respectful but realistically idiotic and despicable.”

— Robin Sacredfire

544. “The vast majority of mankind can't tell the difference between love and lust, intelligence and arrogance, pragmatism and wisdom, or dream and illusion; but truly believes that existence has a meaning, not knowing that such is part of another delusion, one that reveals itself in the lack of answers to the purpose of life.”

— Robin Sacredfire

545. “The wicked ones make us better persons for those who deserve our attention. Nothing is really lost and wasted in this alchemical dance of life.”

— Robin Sacredfire

546. “The wider our conscience, the wider the impact of our actions, and I do believe someone with more light has the moral duty to enlighten others.”

— Robin Sacredfire

547. “The world is full of cowards. They ridicule your ideas for the fear of losing you; they ridicule your achievements for the fear that your success may shadow their uselessness as living beings; they ridicule your pride for the fear that your awareness may cast light on the weak and wicked; they ridicule you with gossip to stop you from using your awareness to highlight what is rotting in the heart of others; and when everything fails, they fear you from day to night and as they sleep. Their thoughts become so immersed by fear that they can't stop thinking about ways to destroy you in any form possible. In their mind, you represent evil, danger and everything else they might fear. And so, they will use any excuse to finish you. But that is the inevitable path of the brightest light. Once you acknowledge such truth, your power and strength become immortal.”

— Robin Sacredfire

548. “The world is full of hypocrites, and the biggest hypocrites don't understand why all their faith and obsession with religion and work isn't enough for them to get their dreams. God knows they are stealing from Him and giving to Satan, looking for an easy way out. Because that is what hypocrites do, when they give money to a priest or an author they never met in exchange for a belief, but neglect the people God sends their way, either because such people are humble or because such people are not famous enough. Those hypocrites deserve nothing. Only Satan can help them, and even that help they do not deserve. No book or knowledge or truth can ever help them. The hypocrites are hostages to their ego.”

— Robin Sacredfire

549. “The world is the atrium of the divine Being, a field of changes in which the perception and power of thought give shape to all things and then dissolve them again.”

— Robin Sacredfire

550. “The world owes nothing to nobody. But the price of doing nothing about it is a life without dreams. And dreams are what makes life worth.”

— Robin Sacredfire

551. “There are five types of poverty. Money is just one of them. Love, Wisdom, Motivation and Hope are the other four.”

— Robin Sacredfire

552. “There are many ways to achieve the same end, and that's the meaning of life - to explore our individuality and joy in living what matches our level of understanding, wisdom and honesty.”

— Robin Sacredfire

553. “There are only two types of spiritual people, the ones who read and those who don't. Those who don't are smart enough to create their own religion, because they can make theories out of things they don't understand.”

— Robin Sacredfire

554. “There are people in Europe that struggled during an entire life to save as much as possible in banks that bankrupted and left them homeless.”

— Robin Sacredfire

555. “There are three rules that exclude anyone from the grace of God: The unwillingness to love someone who has chosen a different path, religious or not; The lack of capacity to bridge material needs with spiritual purposes; And the idea that one owns the non-written book of God.”

— Robin Sacredfire

556. “There are two types of positive thinkers: The ones who are not afraid to get angry and those who are trying to suppress their negative emotions, and becoming profoundly insane in the process.”

— Robin Sacredfire

557. “There is a correlation between the physical and spiritual worlds but only attachment to the physical world causes emotional suffering.”

— Robin Sacredfire

558. “There is a whole world that I see and others don't. I can talk to aliens during my dreams, be awakened by dead people, and then see a demon sitting right in front of me in a coffee shop during the day, and this demon will be talking to me too through the mind of a weak soul, provoking, in front of others and telepathically. Nobody can see these things except me. And I can't say it's easy to live such life. It often seems to others that I'm super smart but actually I'm just seeing more realities than they can or ever will, and all the time. It makes me feel exhausted, it makes me feel apart and isolated. But I didn't choose this war; I didn't choose this life. I'm just part of it since I was born.”

— Robin Sacredfire

559. “There is more ability to meditate in a rabbit than in one thousand Buddhists.”

— Robin Sacredfire

560. “There is much hypocrisy inside the heart of a vast majority of religious individuals but their judgment is not yet to come until they accumulate enough karma to burn for eternity, for there is nothing more despicable than one that, in the name of a higher power, delays the fulfilling of the divine masterpiece.”

— Robin Sacredfire

561. “There is no such thing as cults. A cult is nothing more than a group of people that can't question reality and think or decide independently, which would lead us into classifying the human race as the biggest cult on Earth.”

— Robin Sacredfire

562. “There's no such thing as sensitive people. Only people who are more connected to their heart than others, that are so selfish that can only react when afraid of dying. It's never about being sensitive but spiritually evolved. Many humans are simply below what a common dog or pig would easily understand without the use of fear.”

— Robin Sacredfire

563. “There is only deception where ignorance is abundant. If you have been fooled, it is only because your mind has enough ignorance for foolishness to prosper.”

— Robin Sacredfire

564. “There is something quite healthy to the feeling of anger. When you listen to music that makes you hate more the ones you’re supposed to hate, for example, we can say that music has a healing power. It would be unhealthy to love people who constantly hurt you, either they are family, spouses or even children. It is sick to think that anyone can be immune to hate, as it is delusional to believe some people, for having a pretty face or an innocent smile, are immune to karma, to the price they must pay for what they do, in this or previous reincarnations. You see, you may not hate them, and they will still pay the price for what they do.”

— Robin Sacredfire

565. “Hate is nothing more than the need to scratch the skin when a large bird is above your head plucking your brain. It’s normal. To hate it is also normal. And to hit that bird really hard is healthy. To kill the bird may not be necessary, but wouldn’t be unnatural either.”

— Robin Sacredfire

566. “There is something quite impressive about being humiliated, psychologically abused and beaten harshly for many years. After a while, you don’t feel anything anymore. And that, my friend, is when the fun really begins.”

— Robin Sacredfire

567. “There is something very interesting about bullies that make them special. You see, a bully is a coward; the bully is terribly afraid of the world around him, and he can’t stop himself from being in fear all the time. It is something organic that he can’t control. That is why the bully seems to have no discipline and never listen to authority or authoritarian commands. Now, another very interesting thing about the bully is that, as he is a coward, he needs to erase this feeling of panic of the world, by regaining control over reality. And the only way to do this is by picking the weakest link he can find, that is, the one who will not fight back, the safer victim around. This, however, doesn't mean the victim is hopeless, weak or guilty of anything. The bully simply selects a target for his suppressed fear. If the victim reacts, the bully will have to start picking someone else to channel his endless frustrated sense of unworthiness. And although it is true that many people have the potential to be bullies, what makes the bully special is his lack of capacity to control himself, to stop himself or to feel ashamed of his own actions. Actually, the bully enjoys public performances of his cowardice the most, because that is how he feeds his very little ego and very weak personality. That is the only thing that makes his life worthy, for the bully has no sense of self-worth and often considers himself unworthy. As a matter of fact, the bullies who think they don't deserve to be alive, are the ones telling others to kill themselves. Basically speaking, the weaker a soul, the more suppressive that soul will be towards others."

— Robin Sacredfire

568. There is something very wrong with this world when security guards approach me in a coffee shop of Vilnius, in Lithuania, and say: 'We need your identity to prove you're not Russian, because we've been watching you through the security cameras for three hours and you are still here, since 7am, reading a book.'

569. "There is something very wrong with the world if I'm writing a book in a Spanish coffee shop and people think I'm planning an attack due to my skin color."

— Robin Sacredfire

570. "There isn't any drug worse than money. Madness, deceptions and criminal behavior emerge from the need of more of it."

— Robin Sacredfire

571. “There isn’t a cure for consciousness, and feeling bad about ourselves reflects the evidence that there’s something terribly wrong with this world and the way it affects our personal reality.”

— Robin Sacredfire

572. “There will come a day in which the most advanced forms of psychology and psychiatry will recognize spirituality as the most advanced means of helping anyone.”

— Robin Sacredfire

573. “There’s a reason why people find each other, and this reason is found in their emotional motives before they meet. They both attracted one another by their needs, desires and dreams. And so, only their fears, ignorance and misused freewill can set them apart before they have a chance to discover that they were blessed and not condemned to one another. This truth is asleep in their heart, waiting to be unlocked with faith, a leap into the unknown, kind words and gestures that unmask their soul.”

— Robin Sacredfire

574. “There’s always an antagonistic personality in any group, simply because life isn’t meant to be simple. Our thoughts can be clear, we may know what we want, but life will always show us the duality, simply because that’s how things are meant to be. Before a three, there’s a two; before the change, there is the choice. It is just what it is; and yet, the antagonist is often the one we love the most, because this is how his temptation can lead us astray.”

— Robin Sacredfire

575. “There’s always something better waiting for us when we learn to believe we deserve better.”

— Robin Sacredfire

576. “There’s no point in fighting for a woman that is rude and boring, interested only in her own needs, just because she’s pretty. Such woman shortens a man’s lifespan.”

— Robin Sacredfire

577. “There’s no such thing as passivity. You’re either consciously inactive or unconsciously inactive. In both cases, you’re interfering with a certain outcome and contributing to your fate.”

— Robin Sacredfire

578. “There’s no such thing as positive thinking. There is, however, positive acting and positive doing, and positive being. Positive thinking is the reflection of such activities. You can’t force yourself to think positively, but merely suppress negativity and get insane while pushing yourself along a river that flows on the opposite direction. Every life challenge is there to show you that you don’t want to hit the rocks. It’s really that simple when you look at things as they show themselves to you. You flow with the stream and you avoid the rocks along the way. That’s positive thinking, even when you are angry about life, even when you’re complaining, and even when you feel antagonistic with the world and the ones around you. That’s the truth, simply because it will bring you back results. And that, you won’t ever get by sitting on the floor and imagining emotions. You have the right to hate the rocks that come your way, as long as you keep paddling and enjoying the journey. There’s no reason for closing your eyes and pretend the rocks aren’t there, or for trying to make them vanish with wishful thinking, or for expecting a big magical bird to save you and take you in his wings for a pleasant flight in the skies.”

— Robin Sacredfire

579. “There’s something more surprising than becoming a bestseller, and that’s receiving messages of hate from other fellow authors.”

— Robin Sacredfire

580. “There’s too much darkness, too much ignorance and too much self-destruction in the world. And love, the emotion people crave so much, has come to my attention that is often used by higher powers, and God Himself, to create faster cycles. Love is pushing people to their abyss, when they’re supposed to fall, and to a higher ground, when they’re meant to live fully. But love in itself isn’t good or bad; It’s just a force, the strongest one.”

— Robin Sacredfire

581. “There’s a reason for the word heartbeat not be called beat of heart. The perfect woman only needs a good heart. The beat will follow. Emotions, when put in equilibrium with reason, create more miracles than any strong emotion deprived from reason. This is why it’s much easier to love a woman that can play the drums or any other instrument with rhythm, than one that believes in unreasonable magic, simply because there’s more magic in reason than in the lack of it. You see, loving someone that you truly want to love, someone you admire, someone you want to spend your time with, helping, sharing and growing together, makes much more sense than expecting someone to love you for no other reason than your will, needs and desires. And when humans understand this, they will understand love, find it easily and never lose it again.”

— Robin Sacredfire

582. “There’s clearly a war against freedom of awareness happening, and the most resistant fighters are the chosen victims, in a deliberate, persistent and consistent dumbing down of the population.”

— Robin Sacredfire

583. “There’s no such thing as fiction or imagination, as they’re merely non-fiction manifestations in the wrong parallel universe.”

— Robin Sacredfire

584. “The greatest revolutionary act is not to oppose a government, but to oppose your parents, spouse and friends, and risk being alone, facing the opposition of yourself in the form of guilt and remorse.”

— Robin Sacredfire

585. “There are mainly four types of living beings: vegetables, parasites, animals and humans. Vegetables go through life without any conscience of what it means to be alive, and all they can do is react to what happens around them and unto them. Parasites take advantage of other beings to survive but cannot survive on their own. In fact, they rather kill their host than to improve themselves independently. Animals are driven by basic instincts, like sex and pleasure for food. Animals can have attachments but that is as far as they go in what concerns love. Now, humans, they are capable of all that, plus the ability to love at will, to change, help others change, and create any reality they want to experience. However, almost everyone I encounter, is either pretending to be a plant, a parasite or an animal, not a human. Few people know what it means to be human, and that's how they waste their existence. This said, we wouldn't need to answer questions about life purpose when the purpose is understood in being what one was born to be.”

— Robin Sacredfire

586. “Those who know me tend to get scared at how well I know them behind their masks. They ignore the fact that they reveal themselves to me when I mirror their behaviors and despite their judgments or reasons. What a person says isn't as truthful about such person as what she does when you do the same to her."

— Robin Sacredfire

587. "Those who think banks and governments are making them poor haven't seen the whole picture. Poverty is the act of trusting their system."

— Robin Sacredfire

588. "Those who are insane will basically say that truth doesn't exist but can't explain why they exist and hold a perspective of truth based on disbelief."

— Robin Sacredfire

589. "Those who claim that they can't change because people don't change, are being selfish, ignorant and abusive. They deserve no friends and no love. They deserve to be ignored."

— Robin Sacredfire

590. "Time is an illusion. If someone says he has a problem but no time to hear a solution, he is showing lack of consciousness."

— Robin Sacredfire

591. "To be depreciated and humiliated isn't a statement of your worth but rather an evidence of your disregarded potential."

— Robin Sacredfire

592. "To believe that an insane person can be helped by priests or psychiatrists, is like believing that the slaughter can help the dying lamb."

— Robin Sacredfire

593. “To believe that there are difficult or unreachable things, doesn't change the nature of such things, but only our position towards them.”

— Robin Sacredfire

594. “To say that I know a lot about life, spirituality and consciousness, because I read lots of books, is the same as saying I finished university because I went to primary school.”

— Robin Sacredfire

595. “To say that the planet is overpopulated with billions of humans is one perspective. To say that there are billions of planets in the universe that should be colonized by humans, is another perspective.”

— Robin Sacredfire

596. “To say that the purpose of life is happiness, is like saying that the purpose of a tree is to grow roots in the ground. That's not the purpose but how you start living.”

— Robin Sacredfire

597. “To speak in a spiritual sense is to create, but to write is to fix an ephemeral aspect of reality, such as a thought, in the material world. When an author writes with a spiritual purpose and meaning, he is recording in the memory of eternity. When someone then reads this message, is assimilating in himself the meaning of what was written. But to read beyond the words is to recognize the greatest immutable laws that guide us towards love and harmony.”

— Robin Sacredfire

598. “To succeed in creating wealth, you must learn to control the mechanics of profit and understand the laws of wealth, rather than focusing in accumulating paper-money.”

— Robin Sacredfire

599. “To think you know about things you don't know and don't want to know, is a form of arrogance, disguising fear.”

— Robin Sacredfire

600. “Tobacco, alcohol, marijuana and sugar are all antidepressants. And so, it is actually ironic that psychologists are so concerned about a disease that has already spread to nearly all society. That nearly everyone in this world is depressed is a fact. How depressed they are, depends only on the amount of these things that they consume on a daily basis.”

604. “Under the guise of helping the sick, oppressed and hopeless, psychiatry is paving the way for authoritarian governments to suppress a whole society furthermore, with drugs and obscene practices that promote, not only hypnotic suggestions, but also highly suggestible individuals which, otherwise, would oppose a whole repressive system that threatens both their existence and the existence of future generations on Earth. And so, one can very well say that, psychiatry, aided by pharmaceutical corporations and power-driven governments, or merely governments fearful of their own people and the extinction of immoral politics, will contribute vastly to the extermination and full extinction of the human race.”

— Robin Sacredfire

605. “Unfortunately, the main problem of the world isn't on what concerns money, as it might seem at first sight, but on the mind of those who either use it, create it, maintain it, capitalize on it, or simply, ignore it. What use would science have if people didn't have problems needing a solution? What use would art have if people didn't have a need to escape their reality? What use would reading have if there was no desire to aspire to? What use would dreams have if life was perfect? And so, I'm not saying that money is necessary, but that our mind is what makes it valuable. And once you understand this, you actually master it. The solution lays on the fundamental laws of duality. The more you disregard money, the more it becomes a fundamental part of your world. Those that love it, however, don't even need to touch it or worry about it. And how convenient that we tend to ask questions about the things we refuse to learn about.”

— Robin Sacredfire

606. “Upon reaching the time of death, when you leave your body and look back at your memories, it might come as a big surprise to you, to see that you have spent an entire lifetime behaving according to what others expected from you, that is, doing what they expected you to do according to your exterior appearance to them, and based on which they formed their entire conclusions regarding who you are or should be. When that moment comes, you will regret wasting an entire lifetime living in total darkness about your true self. That is when you will wish to be reborn again. And then you will forget your regrets and repeat your previous steps. And you will reborn again, and again, and again, until the world you live in, is uplifted enough to help you go through life in a good way. But, ironically, that cannot be achieved until such world becomes what you wish it to be, until others are better than you. And so, it is paradoxically interesting to realize that you will never become better than those who surround you, and it is up to you to help them help you.”

— Robin Sacredfire

607. “Useful idiot is the one who by wearing a white apron, having a college degree, working for the government or following governmental laws, immediately and naturally assumes that his job, even if criminal, based on lies, and socially suppressive, is useful to others, worthy of respect, and must be imposed by force if necessary.”

— Robin Sacredfire

608. “Very few are brave enough to look at the portals to higher dimensions of consciousness that open before their eyes, either they’re confronting them from one perspective or another. These portals represent amazing opportunities for the ones with the courage to see them and cross them. But only a very powerful person possesses the power to open one for others. And if you think that person is what it seems, you will neglect the magician hiding behind the illusion.”

— Robin Sacredfire

609. “Very few spiritual masters know that the student is sometimes a teacher because they haven't acquired such level.”

610. “Very often, it seems to me that people assume that by cutting the wings of others, it becomes easier to love them. They know so little about love that end up creating a perception of love that is devilish and demoniacal; and I end with no other choice but to remain single and isolated, and let them go.”

— Robin Sacredfire

611. “We all do mistakes but the ability to solve them by ourselves is much more valuable than the capacity to make choices. We never know which choice is the best.”

— Robin Sacredfire

616. “We block our conscious wants with beliefs. It's important to find them, with a psychologist, tarot, book, or anything else. That's how you define quality in any of these choices, as they either give you what you need or not.”

618. “We can't escape the magnetic field around us. The people who are closest to you, such as neighbors, colleagues and friends, as well as everyone else that you encounter when using public transportation, affect your energy field. And that's why, those who know it, have always, throughout history, tried to be apart from society, in their castles and palaces positioned in isolated locations.”

— Robin Sacredfire

619. “We haven't evolved in our understanding about spirituality or gained more knowledge about it. What we've done was create more organizations based on the exact same principles, so that everyone can be happy and worship or not whoever they want, while interpreting the same words in their own way.”

— Robin Sacredfire

625. “We must look at the past with our eyes in the future.”

— Robin Sacredfire

626. “We often wish good luck to a student, namely, when he is about to have an exam. But a good student doesn’t depend on luck or chance. He determines his own success and future.”

— Robin Sacredfire

627. “We only need to convince ourselves of our capacity and the game of life is understood.”

— Robin Sacredfire

628. “We all have games, but we often play the games of others.”

— Robin Sacredfire

629. “We must not look at our mistakes as a barrier to learning or success, but instead, as something inevitable along the process of acquiring knowledge. We must accept our mistakes as an opportunity to learn.”

— Robin Sacredfire

630. “We only pay for what we admire, want and recognize as necessary, even when a cup of coffee is priced at the same value of a book that can change our entire future.”

— Robin Sacredfire

631. “We should always be working towards the reinforcement of our postulates and not our actions, and much less our assumptions about reality or even ourselves. And this, simply because what we create reflects back at us and changes us.”

— Robin Sacredfire

632. “Wealth is conscience about truth in abundance.”

— Robin Sacredfire

633. “What do I think about life experience? I think that someone who spends fifty years of his life repeating the same cycle of problems can only gain a Masters in Stupidity. Intelligence is a choice and not the absence of it, as portrayed by an apathetic acceptance of whatever comes to one's life.”

— Robin Sacredfire

634. “What does spirituality, money and happiness have in common? Everything.”

— Robin Sacredfire

635. “What happens to an evil soul once you offer her knowledge about compassion, love, life, society, moral and ethics? That is an easy question, no? Well then, this person becomes an evil soul with knowledge about compassion, love, life, society, moral and ethics.”

— Robin Sacredfire

636. “What happens when you give people a second chance? They blame you for it. What happens when you give people a third chance? They ridicule you. What happens when you give them a fourth chance? They make sure they will have a fifth. What happens when you give them a fifth? They blame you for everything and laugh at you. What happens when you give them a sixth? At this point, they try to kill you by accident or make you poor, before you even have another chance of leaving them. What happens when you give them a seventh chance? They punish you for all the chances you have given them before and betray you in the most horrible way they can, proving that they didn’t deserve not even one chance. Forgiveness is not for everyone, and those who deserve it never reach the point of even needing it.”

— Robin Sacredfire

637. “What is wrong about being right? And why should the wise respect the fools if the fools don’t respect the wise? Only very dishonest personalities feel offended by righteousness; and only the very stupid can feel offended by wisdom. But the capacity to offend the immoral and the stupid unintentionally is a skill only someone very ethically wise possesses. You have to be really outstanding in order to make those who need you the most, hate you. And to be hated by those you pity the most is a divine compliment.”

— Robin Sacredfire

638. “What never existed, never started and never ended. If there was no love in what you experienced, there was only an illusion, from which your future reality will gather the necessary tools to build itself for when you arrive. The ones you will be with in that reality are waiting for you and hoping that you persist until you get there.”

— Robin Sacredfire

639. “What people think about each other is just a reflection of what surrounds them and how they interpret it, but not necessarily the truth. As a matter of fact, if 30% of the people are mentally ill without knowing, 30% of that truth is definitely being misinterpreted. And that’s a lot, more precisely, one fourth of what you hear. At least 25% of what you hear is not true.”

— Robin Sacredfire

640. “What the majority thinks, does not make it a truth by default, and what the majority wishes was true, won't be just because they so desire it was. But we shouldn't oppose the majority; on the contrary, we must be against ignorance promoted by political propaganda with hidden agendas from secular institutions, simply because the ignorant do more harm to themselves than anyone else could.”

— Robin Sacredfire

641. “What we read about history represents the history of our consciousness.”

— Robin Sacredfire

642. “What you believe, becomes. Nobody can change your mind. Only you can do that.”

— Robin Sacredfire

643. “Whatever you create in your life, you must first create in your imagination.”

— Robin Sacredfire

644. “Whatever you wish for your life, will be first felt in your heart, the voice of your spirit.”

— Robin Sacredfire

645. “When a person fears his own sadness, he attacks the joy of others.”

— Robin Sacredfire

646. “When an arrogant individual reacts aggressively to a question, he is not proving anything but defending the meaning of his arrogance.”

— Robin Sacredfire

647. “When admitting you are wrong, you gain back the control others took away from you when making you lose it. That's why you must say sorry. It represents a change of attitude but not really a change of personality; The changes in the personality come later on, when, by controlling yourself better, you don't express anger. Because saying sorry means nothing but anger means a lot. You should not want to be an angry person. When you get angry, those who make you angry, win; They win control over your emotional state, your thoughts, your words and your behaviors. They may then accuse you of always being angry and never apologizing, but that's not where you should focus your attention. The main point here, is that you're living on the basis of instinctive reaction and not awareness or consciousness. So, when you say sorry, you are acknowledging that there is no excuse for losing control over yourself. You should not be sorry for being angry. That's an emotion;

and you can't feel sorry for feeling. When you're angry, you are feeling. When you insult, however, you are losing, yourself, your self-control, your self-respect, and even your capacity to use what you know. More knowledge, makes you more aware, more frustrated, having more and higher expectations on others, and more angry too, more often as well. But that's your problem; not other people's problem. They are just being themselves. Most people really think they are perfect as they are, and that the problems they experience are all outside themselves. And by realizing that, you say sorry as if saying sorry for not being who you really are. And when doing it, you get back the control another person took away from you. It is actually not good when someone needs to say sorry too often to someone else, especially if it's always the same individual. But that someone else often likes it, as it makes him or her feel superior. That's because their ego needs that. They have low self-esteem. Most people do. And that's why most people's behavior is wired to their ego. Their likes and dislikes are connected to a sense of self-importance and a desperate need to feel important, which they project on their idols, the famous and most popular among them. They admire what they seek the most. When they think they are not important, they offend, to get aggression, which is a desperate need for attention; and to feel like victims of life, which is a deeper state of need, in this case, related to sympathy; and they then blame the other for what he does, for his reactions; and when that other says sorry, they think they have power over that insane cycle in which they now live, and in which they incorporate anyone else, and which they now perfectly master. Their pride is built on arrogance, an arrogance emerged out of ignorance; ignorance composed from delusional cycles within a big illusion; but an illusion that makes sense to them, as if they were succeeding at merging truth with lie, darkness with light. Because the arrogant, the abusive and the violent are desperate. God made them blind after witnessing their crimes against moral and ethics - His own laws. And they want to see again, and feel the same pleasure they once felt when witnessing the true colors of the world during childhood. The arrogant want to reaffirm their sanity by acting insanely, because they know no other way. And when you say sorry, you are saying to them that you don't belong there, to their world, and that you are sorry for playing their games. That drama belongs to them only, and not you. And yet, people interpret the same paradox as they choose. That is their experience of truth and how they put sense on a life without any. And when so much nonsense becomes popular, we call it common sense. When common sense becomes a reality, we call it science. And when science is able to theorize common sense, we call it wisdom. Then, we wonder why the wisdom of those we name wise, does not help."

— Robin Sacredfire

648. "When Buda mentioned that everything is an illusion, he was not being metaphysical but truly practical. When you think you are more important than others, you attract people who think they are more important than you. When you become humble, you attract people humbler than you. The smarter you are, the more you attract people who think you are dumb, because that's how you look at others from that standpoint. And love? Ah, love, that aphrodisiac emotion everyone is looking for. When you are selfish, you attract the selfish, when you are arrogant, you attract the arrogant, and when you get mad, you attract madness. When you ignore, you are ignored, and if you despise, you will be despised. If you try to change the other person, she will change again, until you can't change anymore, and that's when she stops changing. And when you accept the things you actually don't want to accept, you reject yourself along the way. And the more you seek for love, the less you'll find it. Surprisingly enough, when you fall in love with life as it is, many will easily fall in love with you and try to change it, simply because that is what love is, the music nobody listens but everyone wants to dance to and play. Sometimes you don't want to love, but everyone wants to love you, everyone is secretly loving you and desiring you and only you.”

— Robin Sacredfire

649. “When Freemasons vainglory on their deeds during the French Revolution, they forget that many innocents paid with their own life for that, including pregnant women and children from the royal families, and those who have witnessed it didn't forget, and will likewise turn the karma back on them in the years to come, making their innocents pay for the guilty ones.”

— Robin Sacredfire

650. “When I had the information, nobody wanted to hear. When I needed help, nobody was near. But when I got successful, they all came for me, and I wasn't where I was before. I was not available anymore.”

— Robin Sacredfire

651. “When I look at our whole Earth, the galaxy and even the universe, full of beautiful constellations and Earth-like planets, I can't stop questioning why do people think they are so important to the point of using others, feeling jealousy and hatred towards those who expose them to something they can't confront, such as their weaknesses, imperfections, failures, fears and attachments. But whichever path I choose, the answer always comes as one: Everyone's reality matches them, and they will never recover from whatever occurs to them, for as long as they call home to this mental institution called Earth, for as long as they call normal to what is abnormal, and for as long as they are satisfied with themselves. Earth can show mercy but never regret or remorse, for whenever death approaches with its message, the message always says the same, independently of who reads it: Start again!”

— Robin Sacredfire

652. “When I say something that contradicts the predictions of someone else in the past, people discredit me, not realizing that they are contradicting themselves, for the purpose in knowing the future is the potential in changing it. And so, when I detect changes, it means that the once predicted future is not the same anymore. If the future could not be changed, fortunetelling would be like telling you that you’ll burn yourself at cooking dinner, and then wait for you to do it, instead of inviting you out to a restaurant.”

— Robin Sacredfire

653. “When I think of someone and I feel an emotion, that person, wherever it is, will feel the interference of my emotion.”

— Robin Sacredfire

654. “When I told my friends I was planning to write a book, they said it wouldn’t sell. They were right. I only sold the following three hundred.”

— Robin Sacredfire

655. “When I was a child and told my mother I didn’t feel this was my planet, she thought I was either schizophrenic or autistic. When later I finished a college degree and started working in different countries, she called me monster and started threatening me. Nearly forty years later, when I was making a living from the books I wrote based on what I know, and making six times more money than she ever will, she apologized. I am just not sure why or what she was apologizing for. I had already forgiven her ignorance when realizing nobody would ever believe the truth but myself. I had to go the whole way alone. Nobody was going to come with me on this very long, painful and challenging journey that humans call life but to me was much more than that. It was my mission, of changing their whole future far beyond the time when I’m gone. She was never my mother but merely the human body that gave me birth. In that sense, I was a monster, because I had no love. I had to find that too, on my own.”

— Robin Sacredfire

656. “When I wrote my first book, I was asked to write another. After one hundred, everyone asked me to stop and do something else. After two hundred, I lost all my friends and my girlfriend too.”

— Robin Sacredfire

657. “When Jesus said to turn the other cheek, he meant to ignore those who hurt you. When he said he is the son of God, he added that we are all sons of God too. And he didn’t really say to love our enemies, but to be compassionate with them, for their evil emerges from ignorance. In other words, we are all sons of God and we should aspire to be as Jesus, but if someone hurts you, don’t accept the pain. Rather understand that he does so out of ignorance and it is better to ignore such person. Now, that sounds much more simple, doesn’t it? The Bible is full of practical suggestions that are misinterpreted by lunatics, and that’s all there is to it. He did die in the cross to save mankind from the Roman Empire, but then humans created Communism and since then have not been freed, although Christianity kept expanding. We might very well say at this point that the two main forces in the world are Christianity and Communism, being Communism the army of Satan. Communism is, at present moment, the greatest threat to humanity.”

— Robin Sacredfire

658. “When my father told me that money doesn't grow on trees, he wasn't aware of the variety of seeds that exist in the world. That's why he keeps working in a job while I am enjoying my life. I have planted trees he didn't know to exist. And with them, I reached the heaven in which he does not believe.”

— Robin Sacredfire

659. “When opportunities are easily recognizable for their efficiency, aesthetics and truth, people naturally feel attracted to them. This is a universal law.”

— Robin Sacredfire

660. “When people pray, their prayers are heard, but the answers manifest in forms that their selfishness blinds them to see.”

— Robin Sacredfire

661. “When people talk about destiny, they tend to forget that it isn’t deprived from free will, free will to both accept it or destroy it. If you were meant to find love and then hurt the person who loves you back, you’ve just exercised your free will against destiny, and that destiny, that brought that person to you, will now use the exact same force to pull such person away from you. You cannot violate the spiritual laws of the universe. You will always pay a heavy price for being ignorant about this fact.”

— Robin Sacredfire

662. “When people think that having multiple sex partners, especially, strangers for one night, is normal, and a personal decision, when they, as well, think that smoking drugs or having addictions is part of growing up, they forget that there are many people in the world that disagree. And how wonderful is the Architect of the Universe, when He puts both opposites together in the name of love, and separates them due to the differences they once tough were never an issue beyond their personal decisions.”

— Robin Sacredfire

663. “When people think that one possibility is not equated to truth, they’re neglecting the fact that truth is a choice whenever the human spirit is part of the logic in question. Geniuses were never weak-minded. They were the counter-balance to an extremely ignorant and fearful civilization. The weaker a people, the more inhuman their leader has to be.”

— Robin Sacredfire

664. “When pushed hard enough to change himself, an individual typically answers: ‘I can’t change the world’, as if the change in the world was a prerequisite to justify his own changes.”

— Robin Sacredfire

665. “When someone tells me that facts are illusions created by the mind, and that the events happening around him are only happening if we see them happening, I know, for a fact, that this person is completely insane and should be put in a mental hospital.”

— Robin Sacredfire

666. “When the masses consciously decide to be unconscious, the masses decide to be annihilated by conscious will. And by the laws of the universe, their desire must be fulfilled, for they have used free will against themselves.”

— Robin Sacredfire

667. “When we go the cinema, we usually see villains portrayed as vampires, zombies and demons. In real life, we have the promiscuous, the alcoholics, the drug addicts and the wicked. But we don’t call them such names, do we? Violence against criminals, verbal or physical, somehow, became unacceptable by our society. Worse than that, we have allowed these villains, the monsters, the psychos, to walk among us, live with us, and even share food, a bed and a family with us. We call them independent women that have one night stands with strangers in the name of love, party people that wake up wasted in the streets, individuals with narcissistic personality disorder, youngsters that smoke marijuana, and on and on. We have learned to accept what was never meant to be acceptable, but exterminated from society, with force if needed, with fire in extreme cases, with bullets and harsh words, at least. But no, this is too evil to the many, to the sheep. What is normal for the new trend of sheep, is to sleep with the wolves and apologize them for eating the sheep, and call the wolves victims of discrimination. The sheep are now so mentally sick they don't care anymore about their own survival."

— Robin Sacredfire

668. "When we travel, colors seem brighter and people nicer. Once we plant roots, and realize our fruits are getting rotten by the storms of ignorance and the winds of bad attitude, that's when we realize we need more sunshine than strong roots."

— Robin Sacredfire

— Robin Sacredfire

670. "Whenever a soul reincarnates within a certain reality, as with planet Earth, he might reincarnate in different periods of human history, without any obligation whatsoever in what regards a time-cycle as we know it. And so, any being from the future can reincarnate in the past and vice-versa."

— Robin Sacredfire

671. “Whenever an artist becomes dominated by his own ignorance, his art loses value, for it is only the professional artist who can be humble enough to admit that he is a tool in the hands of creativity.”

— Robin Sacredfire

672. “Whenever I visit a poor country, the signs of poverty come out as evident. One of the first things to notice immediately, is that the country doesn’t make people poor as the citizens tend to believe. It is the belief that the country makes them poor that actually maintains them in poverty. The belief conditions the mind and blinds the individual in what regards the opportunities constantly emerging within reality. From this point on, there’s no reason to blame and accuse, even though it makes it easier to neglect responsibility. The poor don’t value their friendships, they don’t take foreigners in their country seriously, they think money is more important than how it is made, and they respect only exterior forms of wealth, such as possessions. They ridicule the humble and praise the arrogant. Their women chase men who want nothing more than sex, as a form of climbing the social ladder and gaining admiration from their peers, rather than a future that can take them out of poverty. Their men are so immersed in hate, that they spend more time expelling opportunities than embracing them, due to their egotistical and selfish nature, which, by the way, comes from a mentality of scarcity. And families, in general, are more concerned about keeping their habits intact, than questioning their entire culture and beliefs. In general, nobody is born poor in a poor country, but made poor by attitude. You can see many teenagers wasting their spare time with alcohol, drugs and prostitution, in the form of guilt-free sex with strangers, while their libraries are abandoned to the dust and transition of time. Ignorance is so abundant in these countries that their people are completely oblivious to what is happening in the rest of the world and still ask questions already answered for many centuries, even thousands of years. Another interesting fact about these nations, is that they’re either vastly atheist, or obsessed with very primitive views on religion. In both cases, they demonstrate a very weak and vulnerable approach to spirituality.”

— Robin Sacredfire

673. “Whenever one is more evolved, he has to endure two type of frustrations: The lack of technologic evolution at the level he is, and the lack of understanding of the fools that find themselves perfectly adjusted to their world.”

— Robin Sacredfire

674. “Whenever one of my girlfriends arrived home drunk, smoked weed behind my back, and flirted with other men in front of me, she stabbed the relationship in the chest with a smile on her face. Forgiveness is for those who deserve, not for the ones who are committing suicide and dragging other people down with them towards hell. Her tears have never represented regrets but guilt. This beautiful blond woman with amazing green eyes sparkled with yellow color like a mandala, entered my life to destroy me and, deep down, she knew that, but couldn’t stop herself or let me go, because the same spiritual instinct that made her do such things, wanted me dead as well. She was a demon hiding in the body of an angel. Once I abandoned her, she nearly died from a sudden disease; a disease that will certainly kill her soon.”

— Robin Sacredfire

675. “Whenever we talk about darkness and light, the terms seem so abstract that many consider the answers to be found in meditation and yoga, but I’m here to tell you that the answers are in the books you will never read, waiting all your life in the libraries you ignored and the bookstores you didn’t visit. I’m here to tell you as well that you are your own enemy and evil can’t possibly interfere more in your life than what you’re already doing to yourself by remaining ignorant. Until you choose the light, darkness is your personal choice, and there's no reason to feel any empathy for you."

— Robin Sacredfire

676. "Whenever you can't confront reality, you can't love and you can't protect yourself against the lack of it. Wisdom can help you, because wisdom consists in the ability to love oneself, confront reality and accept the mistakes of others. That requires courage, but courage without wisdom is foolishness in disguise. You must be wise to see through and remain calm. It is a never-ending goal, and as much as the intensity of the complexities you're faced with. More complexities require more wisdom. Peace can't be found without an action towards it, and solutions that justify it. An antagonistic solution would only present itself as such whenever wisdom has failed. An avatar must be immensely wise to live with himself but not ignorant enough to accept the masses when confronted with their ignorance. However, if you're just a mortal being struggling against endless challenges, pray to God for wisdom, for He will bring forth to your realm His most highly recommended masters and meaningful literature. If you find them, don't judge them by how they appear, look or are dressed. Don't judge them as well by when and where they appear to you; for the unwise does not have the right to judge the mysteries unveiling his own ignorance. And if you find a book in a trashcan, do not judge it as well by where you have found it. Salvation is everywhere. It is wise to believe that. We suffer more due to the immense signs we reject than the lack of insights in those we accept."

— Robin Sacredfire

708. “You think that a person without a soul, which feeds on responsibility, moral and joy, asks questions to improve and learn how to love? No. Such person asks questions to learn how to destroy effectively. In her head, however, she thinks that she is just protecting herself, because evil comes from fear. And the fear of being hurt leads to the greatest evil. And how ironic that the evil ones are terrified of love. They hurt the most, the ones who love them best.”

— Robin Sacredfire

709 “You think that what you see in poor countries is poverty? No. What you really see is very poor states of mind, poor values, poor awareness, poor compassion, poor empathy, poor moral and a poor ethic. Poverty, as in lack of money, is just a consequence of all those things.”

Few have the courage to sacrifice everything for the acquisition of knowledge, and that’s how you build an efficient strategic mindset. Even fewer, will have the courage to exchange their life for a dream worth living, and that’s the highest level of persistence.

— Robin Sacredfire

717. “Zen is the ultimate goal in life. When you can feel at peace with your loneliness as much as you are when surrounded by friends; when you can allow yourself to attach to objects and offer them to others; when you are able to love and unlove without remorse or regret; when you are able to seek adventure and also plant roots on the right soil; when you are able to surrender yourself to change, but also refuse it when unnecessary or unhealthy to your development; when you can feel anger and joy at will, and not when stimulated by experiences; when you are capable of accepting your spiritual nature and detach from it too; when you can do all these things, you will know zen, you will know enlightenment, and you will be free.”
